20,000 See Challedon Win Duel of Champions

Maryland-Bred Colt Defeats Kayak II; Cravat Poor Third In Pimlico Special

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 1.—Challedon's "horse of the year" crown was unsteady for a few brief moments this afternoon. Faced by defeat, and locked in a soul-stirring head-to-head battle—a beautiful thing to see—Challedon "came again," as all true champions should, to win by half a length from Kayak II in the third running of the Pimlico Special.

At the quarter pole, it was Kayak II by a neck. At the three-sixteenths pole, it was Kayak II by a neck. At the eighth pole, it was Kayak II by a head. But at the sixteenth pole, it was the gallant Challedon, coming on to claim his own. Twenty yards from the wire, it was Challedon by a neck. It was Challedon going away—the winner.

It was before a crowd of 20,000, sentimentally in favor of a Challedon victory even if their money was not pointed that way, that the greatest horse ever foaled in Maryland turned in his smashing victory. The throng, cheering madly as Challedon set the early pace, let out a chorus of "Ahs" as Kayak II displaced the Frederick star, and then let loose a bedlam of sound that made "thunder on the road to Mandalay" resemble a public library whisper.

Cravat Ten Lengths Behind

There was a third member of the special field, but Cravat, the long shot, resembled a piece of fish bait being reeled out for trolling purposes. He finished ten lengths behind Kayak II and showed nothing more than the fact that he could run around the track. He was never in trouble.

There was more glory than gold involved in the race both for Owner W. L. Brann, the Indianan turned Marylander and also for the backers of Challedon. There was little more than interest on their money awaiting Challedon backers but it was a joyous crowd that lined up to collect at the rate of $2.90 for the usual deuce.

There was more to the race, than the time. Challedon has run the mile and three-sixteenths faster than the 1:59 he turned in today. However, he won, and that was the big thing.

He added only peanuts to his total winnings in the modest $10,000, winner-take-all reward, but he already had established himself as the year's leading money winner. It was his nothing-to-win and all-to-lose race. He was on the spot. He turned the spot into a blue ribbon.

Track in Good Condition

The weather man treated the Maryland Jockey Club kindly. Instead of the "fetlock deep in mud" track that the experts had anticipated, the racing oval was in good condition. A bright sun and constant harrowing, even last night when the rain was falling, improved the track steadily.

But the courage that Challedon showed today, the will to win, the stamina of the mighty, probably would have been apparent regardless of track conditions. He set the pace. He held on doggedly when displaced. He felt the whip. He responded.

It was running over the same course where he was a doubtful betting proposition in the Preakness of last May, that Challedon established himself as a true champion today.

Trainer Lou Schaefer sent him to the post looking all the part of a fit horse. With the lead pony, Challedon galloped a quarter of a mile in a warm-up before being brought back to the starting gate. Kayak II galloped along behind Challedon, while Cravat, as in the race, brought up the rear in the prerace doings.

The horses were at the post less than a minute. Starter Jim Milton, who was ruled out of the starter's box last year when Seabiscuit defeated War Admiral, sent the trio away in perfect alignment.

Breaks On Top

Challedon broke on top, with Kayak II second, and Cravat third. Then followed a demonstration of riding that has seldom been equaled in a big race. Apparently Jockey Eddie Arcaro, riding Challedon for the first time in competition, did not want to go to the front. He restrained the son of Challenger II, but Jockey George Woolf, aboard Kayak II appeared to have the

Extend Inquiry 2 Years, Dies Asks House

Texan Personally to Probe Murder Charge Against McCuistion

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

Chairman Dies yesterday asked the House to extend the life of his committee to investigate un-American activities for two more years.

At the same time he announced he intends to investigate personally at New Orleans the circumstances surrounding the murder charge brought against William C. McCuistion, an important committee witness.

In a resolution which made no mention of additional funds, Dies requested that the committee be permitted to continue until January 3, 1942. The resolution under which the committee is now operating provides for its demise on January 3.

Dies has stated in the past that he hopes for an appropriation of at least $100,000 to permit the committee to continue. The inquiry has received a total of $125,000 since its origin last year.

Committee to Recess

The chairman declared last night that the committee will recess for two or three weeks immediately after adjournment of the special session. In that period, he said, he intended to visit his home in Texas. En route he will stop at New Orleans.

"I'm going to find out whether that charge is a frameup," said Dies last night. "The New Orleans police have told us that the National Maritime Union insisted on McCuistion's arrest; and from conversations we have had with the police, I have doubts about the va-

Day's Delay Makes Pageant No Less Comic, Large or Gay

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

The country's loudest and longest Halloween parade uncoiled itself last night on Constitution avenue.

A day late but unabashed, an amiable army commandeered the broad thoroughfare for two hours, flaunting its clashing sounds and colors against the chill, granite dignity of the Federal Triangle.

The police put it this way:

"A total of 2,093 participants; 1,719 marchers, 39 floats, 16 bands and 16 'inflated figures.'"

But what the crowd of 75,000 saw was this:

Jitterbugs in red, white and blue; a dachshund as long as a streetcar, with a roguish right eye; Mickey Mouse sniffing the biggest piece of limburger ever sliced; Dutch schoolgirls, Chinese mandarins, Indian squaws, witches, clowns, pirates, banshees and Boy Scouts, and one live duck.

Citizens, The Queen!

Spectators were massed four deep from Sixth to Seventeenth streets northwest when a detachment of motorcycle police nosed up the avenue, leading the way for Queen Winnie Porter, smiling down from her perch on the gay royal float.

Coast Guard searchlights threw powdery blue bands against the darker velvet of the November sky. The beams met in the boughs and crisp foliage above the Queen's reviewing stand, opposite the Ellipse.

A pair of heralds in blue and silver satin flourished trumpets as the royal party dismounted at the stand. Flanked by the red and blue uniforms of the Police Boys Club Band and the purple and white of Job's Daughters, the 18-year-old queen received a bouquet of golden chrysanthemums from Albert Clyde-Burton, assistant superintendent of the National Capital Parks.

Wished Happy Reign

He wished her a long and happy reign. The bands struck up "Land of Hope and Glory." In the blue backdrop of the royal stand a pumpkin-colored moon flashed on. Halloween's royalty ascended their dais.

"Anchors Aweigh" sounded down the avenue, for the first of a dozen times.

Forty pirates, mustered by a local night club, stormed into the reviewing plaza and hoisted the black flag.

They carried ancient muskets, cutlasses and pistols—everything but a gang plank. The Queen and her ladies-in-waiting were blown a boisterous collective kiss. Two bold buccaneers chased the court jester into hiding.

Latin-American Trade Center To Rise in N. Y.

Rockefeller Plaza May Be Chosen as Site for Huge Mart

By the Associated Press

Latin-American diplomats and United States businessmen inaugurated a campaign yesterday to stimulate United States purchases of Latin-American goods and agreed to establish a huge market place in New York City.

The merchandizing center, probably to be located in Rockefeller Center, would afford businessmen from both continents a place to meet and show their wares.

Dozen Samples Shown

Edward J. Noble, at a press conference after the meeting, sponsored by the Commerce Department, explained that United States purchases from Latin America were emphasized because a huge volume of orders from Latin America—estimated by some at $250,000,000—had switched to this country because of the war. Germany alone, now cut off by the Allied blockade, sold about a quarter of a billion dollars worth of merchandize in Latin America last year.

Noble said business between the Americas would be seriously disrupted if the United States sold a great deal more merchandise in Latin America without balancing the sales with purchases.

Discussions to Continue

Noble described the meeting as a "down to brass tacks" session in which 13 prominent United States retailers told 20 invited delegates from 16 Latin-American republics exactly what they might purchase. They exhibited more than a dozen samples of merchandise formerly bought in Europe which now might be taken from Latin America.

The retailers said Latin American manufacturers had concentrated too much on specialty items, particular-

Queried as Spy At Capitol, Girl Is Only a Student

Visions of Mata Hari and Belle Crawford have arisen in the Capitol to haunt House doorkeepers, a Congressman, a Metropolitan police detective and agents of the FBI, The Post learned yesterday.

A comely young woman, seen writing notes in "purple ink and a foreign language" in the House gallery, was detained and questioned by those officials Tuesday on suspicion that she might be a spy.

Unfortunately for this story, however, the spy suspect turned out—after more than an hour's grilling by the FBI men—to be a student at Catholic University writing a letter to her mother in Germany.

U. S. Executive Taken to Task By Merit System Committee

By Alfred Friendly.

A top-ranking Government executive was told off yesterday by a Supreme Court justice, a former Civil Service Commissioner, and a commission expert. The occasion provided the only fireworks in a dull day of hearings before the President's Committee on Merit System Improvement.

The victim was Morris E. Copeland, executive officer of the Central Statistical Board. He complained that the Civil Service Commission made it almost impossible to dismiss inefficient employes from the Government service, and that position seekers with political pull could get their examination grades changed via "the back door route" at the commission.

Kenneth C. Vipond, the commission's assistant chief examiner, sitting in on the hearings, answered the first accusation.

Obviously angry, he snapped, "It's the simplest thing in the world to remove an inefficient employe and it has nothing to do with commission procedure. All the administrator has to do is to prefer charges of inefficiency in writing. The employe may answer the charges, but the administrator can go ahead and dismiss the employe, who has no

House Votes On Embargo Repeal Today

Boland Forecasts Small Majority; Final Action Seen By End of Week

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The House last night virtually concluded general debate on the Administration's neutrality bill and prepared to dispatch it to conference today.

Indications were that the arms embargo would be eliminated by a small majority. As the Senate has voted repeal, the completed neutrality measure, minus the embargo, would be ready for final Congressional action by the close of the week.

On the eve of the long-delayed House showdown, Majority Whip Boland, who has been constantly polling House sentiment, predicted repeal would be voted by a "minimum majority of 20 votes." Other leaders placed their estimates higher, but the margin was obviously close.

The House will meet at 11 a. m., today, an hour early. At 2 p. m., Majority Leader Sam Rayburn plans to move to close further debate, which already has run two days. The House then will start voting on a series of three opposition "instructions" to conferees, aimed at retaining the embargo and further modifications in the bill.

Wants U. S. Envoy Recalled

Rayburn served notice of this plan of action after Representative Schafer (Republican), Wisconsin, blocked a unanimous consent request to start voting on amendments at 2:30 p. m. today, allowing 30 minutes in between votes for debate. Although Minority Leader Martin was agreeable, and remonstrated with Schafer, the Wisconsin Republican persisted in his blockade of the agreement.

To appease those members who sought more time to talk, leaders gave carte blanche permission for the House to sit last night as late as it wished. But speeches slowed to a close at 8:31 p. m., when adjournment was taken. Only a scattering of members remained until the end.

Through nine hours of debate, the House heard familiar arguments for repeal and the reiterated case against, plus a demand that the United States recall its ambassador from Russia because of Soviet Premier-Foreign Commissar Molotoff's criticism of United States foreign policy.

Attempt at Compromise

Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, attacked both Germany and Russia as "anti-God forces" and assailed Molotoff's statements against embargo repeal.

"For that statement made by the official representative of the Soviet government, the U[illegible] States ought to recall its amb[illegible] said McCormack.

"That should be the answer of the United States to this attempt to influence opinion of America and this flagrant violation of international law."

Two isolationist amendments were laid before the House as de-

Mr. Reilly Lives Life of Riley On Fortune Left by Stranger

Kindness Shown By Usher to Movie Patron Brings Riches

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 1.—The man who inherited hundreds of thousands of dollars—when he had just 15 cents in his pockets—looked back on a year of luxury today and decided his biggest kick out of sudden riches was the transition from peanut gallery to ringside seats.

The money came in a bequest from Mrs. Edna Morss Allin Elliott a 70-year-old widow, known as "champion movie fan of New York," who specified in her will that it was for "his kindly and courteous acts" and for making "the recent years of my life more pleasant."

"Now when I want to see a fight or a football game anywhere in the country, I just hop a plane—like I flew out to South Bend, Ind., to see Notre Dame play Georgia Tech," he said.

"And no more seats behind the goal posts, like a million other poor suckers. I take my pals along and we sit on the 50-yard line."

The Manhattan miracle that changed the life of William J. Reilly, 40, a one-time Roxy Theater usher, into a literal "Life of Riley," has meant other things, too.

Four trips to the West Indies . . . $125 suits, $35 shoes and $9 neckties . . . Frequent night-club parties "without a shudder when I pick up the bill" . . . But a headache from spongers and an endless flow of crank letters.

However, as proof against "being a soft touch from old pals" Reilly said he had set up a $200,000 trust fund so he "won't go broke like a sweepstakes winner."

White House Hits Back At Molotoff; Finns Warn They Will Fight

Ready to Settle With Soviet, Says Erkko, if Defense Is Not Threatened

By A. Marcus Tollet
Copyright by New York Times.

Helsinki, Nov. 1.—Finland tonight faced the most fateful hours since the establishment of the republic.

As a five-man delegation journeyed toward Moscow to deliver what was believed to be a firm "no" to Soviet demands, Foreign Minister Erkko declared in a speech his nation would insist to the end on its rights as a neutral and on its rights to self-defense.

"Finland declared herself willing to assist Russia in strengthening Leningrad and also Finnish defenses," he said, but will reject proposals which "would rob us of the possibility of defending the independence and neutrality of our land."

For these rights, Erkko said, the Finns are ready "to throw into the scale all we own."

Port, Channel Mined

Military circles pointed to the fact the Soviet demand for a naval base in southwest Finland in effect would place four major Finnish ports under foreign control. The Russian proposal to compensate Finland by handing over part of Karelia was looked on as weakening Finland's defensive position by greatly extending the line of her frontier, which Russia proposes to demilitarize.

[The Finnish Legation in Copenhagen announced that the Finnish port and peninsula of Hango on the Gulf of Finland had been mined, the United Press said. Mines also have been laid between the Islands of Hastoe and Busoe, closing the narrow channel there into the Gulf of Finland.—Editor's note.]

"Finland cannot see any danger of Russia's security being threatened by the Finnish state or territory," declared Erkko, addressing a defense fund rally. "Should a third power attempt to use Finland as a base for an attack against the Soviet Union we should resist such an attempt with the fullest force."

A cabinet communique likewise refutes Soviet Premier Molotoff's allusions yesterday to the possibility of danger threatening Russia from Finland. This is regarded as a tactical argument in the present critical stage, because it is asserted that Finland has scrupulously observed friendly relations on the basis of the non-aggression pact of 1932, which is valid until 1945.

Roosevelt Named

Molotoff's references to "foreign influences" having encouraged Finnish hostility toward Russia, were not only directed against President Roosevelt, who was mentioned by name, but also, say political circles, against Sweden, Norway and Denmark who have all taken a sympathetic interest in Finland's difficulties and shown moral support for her stand through the Stockholm conference.

It is hoped that the delegation to Moscow will be able to convince Josef Stalin that there is not the slightest intention of the Nordic states to threaten Russia or allow their territory to be used by a third party for that purpose.

There is no question of any inimical attitude on the part of Finland toward Russia, he declared, and any "settlement which would leave behind the impression of in-

Ration Order Stirs Storm in British Press

Plan to Set Bacon, Butter Limit Called Unnecessary and Stupid

By Russell Anderson,
International News Service Staff Writer

London (Thursday), Nov. 2.—A storm of protest in the British press today greeted the government's first admission that the Nazi counter-blockade was cutting into England's food supply—announcement of the rationing of bacon and butter.

Following the announcement in the House of Commons yesterday by Minister of Health W. L. Morrison, a furore of criticism broke loose. Morrison stated that the rationing would begin before the middle of December. But public reaction began today.

The government came in for sharp criticism on all sides. Coupled with the announcement of Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, that Germany has two pocket battleships of the Deutschland type raiding British commerce in the north and south Atlantic, news of the impending rationing loosed cascades of questioning.

The general attitude of the press was that the rationing is "stupid" and "unnecessary." Morrison was the victim of the brunt of the attack in the Daily Mail which said:

"There's no good reason to excuse Morrison for this stupid decision. His is not a case of being burdened with someone else's stupid decision or finding himself the victim of a war emergency."

The London Daily Express described the rationing plan as "absolute nonsense" and frightening to the public.

"We don't need food rationing," said the Express. "It's absolute nonsense and gives the people a sense of insecurity. It makes them

Early Is Sarcastic About His Speech; Plea to Hitler Was 'Noble,' He Recalls

By William V. Nessly,
Post Staff Writer.

The White House, in effect, last night charged Soviet Russia with inconsistency in its stand toward President Roosevelt's efforts to preserve world peace.

On Tuesday Premier Viacheslav Molotoff of the Soviets had criticized Mr. Roosevelt's recent appeal that Russia make no demands on Finland that would bring war in the Baltic. Last night, without comment but clearly in reply, the White House made public again a six-months-old message from Russian President Kalinin expressing "profound sympathy" with the American President's "noble appeal" to Hitler last April not to invade Finland or any other land named on a list of 31 independent nations.

Earlier in the day, Stephen T. Early, Presidential press secretary, referred caustically to Molotoff's remarks and questioned whether it was "purely coincidental" that the Russian premier and foreign minister had issued his criticism just when an important vote was due in the House on repeal of the arms embargo.

Recall of Envoy Asked

Recall of this country's Ambassador to "the God-less Soviets" was called for on the House floor by Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts.

These quick responses to Premier Molotoff's declarations on Soviet foreign policies, delivered Tuesday before the Soviet Council at Moscow, came amid still-smoldering official resentment toward Russia's course with regard to the German-seized American ship City of Flint.

While the White House made no comment whatever in issuing copies of the messages between Presidents Roosevelt and Kalinin, along with Mr. Roosevelt's appeal to Hitler last spring, the implication that the documents were considered to show inconsistency on the part of the Soviet was plain.

Cable From Kalinin

Copies of the message to Hitler were sent to rulers of the other world powers. On April 16, Kalinin cabled Mr. Roosevelt:

"I consider it my pleasant duty to convey to you my cordial congratulations and an expression of profound sympathy with the noble appeal which you have addressed to the governments of Germany and Italy.

"You may rest assured that your initiative finds most ardent response in the hearts of the peoples of the Soviet Socialist Union."

He signed it, "Sincerely desirous of preservation of universal peace, Kalinin."

Apparently heartened by this expression, President Roosevelt, on April 21, replied to Kalinin:

"I have received your friendly message and am glad to learn that your views with regard to my efforts on behalf of world peace are similar to those expressed to me by the heads of numerous other states."

"Noble Appeal" vs. Meddling

This latter message never had been made public before.

After the messages were made public last night, observers noted that when Mr. Roosevelt asked the German fuehrer for a pledge not to invade Finland and other small states, the Russian President termed it a "noble appeal." When the American Chief Executive recently asked the Moscow Government not to make demands upon Finland that would upset the peaceful relations between those two powers, the Russian premier charged he was meddling, "in contradiction" of the United States' neutrality policy.

The appeal to Hitler asked a 10-year pledge of nonaggression against

Navy Hunts Ship Attacked By Sub in U. S. Neutral Zone

By the Associated Press

Naval and Coast Guard vessels bucked an Atlantic gale last night to search for a British freighter which flashed word she had been beset by a submarine about 680 miles from New York.

The scene of the attack as reported by the freighter Coulmore, a 352-foot collier, was 100 miles inside the Pan American neutrality zone fixed at the recent Panama Conference.

Official quarters here said that if it were established that submarine had fired a torpedo within the neutral zone the United States would consult immediately with other American republics as to what steps to take.

The diplomatic action probably would result in a protest to the offending power, either by the United States and the other American republics individually or by joint action. At the Panama Conference no decision was made as to just what action would be taken if the neutral zone were violated.

The Coast Guard cutter Bibb, one of a number of craft searching for the Coulmore, reached her position this morning but found no sign of the 3,670-ton freighter or of sur-

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

AT THE CAPITAL RINGSIDE

From the ringside, some Senators gained stature during the embargo debate; others lost a little prestige.

* * * *

Oddly, some of the Senators on the winning side lost a little of that fragile intangible thing, prestige; while some on the losing side gained ground.

Harlan Miller

Connally, of Texas, and Danaher, of Connecticut, won considerable acclaim, though on opposite sides of the fence.

So did New Hampshire's Austin, Nebraska's Burke and Norris, Wisconsin's Wiley, Oregon's McNary, Nevada's Pittman and Lodge, of Massachusetts.

Both Byrnes and Barkley got invisible medals from their colleagues.

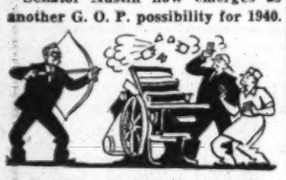
But Minnesota's Lundeen, California's Downey, Idaho's Borah and Missouri's Clark lost ground. Borah had the most to lose; Clark's Presidential boom was slightly punctured.

* * * *

Two G. O. P. presidential aspirants, Taft and Vandenberg, though on opposite sides, both lost a little headway, in the opinion of some. But others feel that Taft gained stature and that Vandenberg lost nothing by his courageous, honest fight.

Senator Austin now emerges as another G. O. P. possibility for 1940.



"—Ickes pursues his hobby"

Secretary Ickes, a promising freshman author, hits the book counters today with his new treatise on his favorite hobby, the American press.

Honest Hal indulges in his favorite pastime of tossing firecrackers at the newspapers.

Like most firecrackers, they are exploded with patriotic motives.

Maybe it's the mellowing influence of a baby around the house that softens Secretary Ickes' assault. He lists twelve newspapers as passably honest and impartial.

* * * *

Because I happen to have worked for four of these newspapers, I'm inclined to believe that there may be a good deal in what Mr. Ickes writes, even when he glares and scolds.

* * * *

During the embargo debate thus far, the women in the galleries of Congress have outnumbered the men by more than 2 to 1. Their hats were funnier than some of the amendments.

* * * *

A Congressman who died last July, Harry Griswold, of Wisconsin, has received over 400 letters from constituents this fall—most of them against the repeal of the embargo.

Some of the letters came from within 12 miles of his home town.

The marvelous Congressman from Oz is the soul of gallantry.

"I never pinch a lady," he declares, "if I've met her socially."

* * * *

Perhaps the most important upshot of the embargo debate is that Congress has definitely recaptured the upper hand in the Government of the United States, overshadowing the White House.

* * * *

Some members feel that the next step is to put a definite time limit on all temporary special powers granted any President.

* * * *

As the embargo debate draws to a close, one important truth emerges: This country, despite all false signs, is not suffering from the jitters and feels amply able to cope with any situation that arises.

House to Vote On Embargo Repeal Today

Rep. Boland Predicts Small Majority For Administration

One of these, on which opposition forces are basing their main hope of blocking repeal, was a tightened version of the original Vorys limited embargo amendment which the House approved last session.

Put forward by Representative Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, the amendment would ban shipments of arms and munitions as listed in the President's proclamation of May, 1937. Shipment of "implements of war" would be permitted within limits. For example, the United States could sell to belligerents airplanes and parts not of a military nature, but bombing planes would be embargoed.

Vorys told the House the amendment was an "attempt to strike a compromise" but the Administration has rejected it as tantamount to a full embargo.

Vorys offered his plan as an amendment to the original opposition motion to instruct the conferees to stand by a full embargo, put forward Tuesday by Representative Shanley (Democrat), of Connecticut.

A third amendment to be voted on today was submitted by Representative Wolcott (Republican), of Michigan. It would specifically forbid the RFC, Export-Import Bank, or any other Federal agency from advancing credit to belligerents.

Under the leadership procedure, already ratified by the House, a number of other opposition proposals would not reach a vote.

Meanwhile, Representative Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the House Merchant Marine Committee, drafted a series of amendments modifying the sharp shipping restrictions proposed in the Senate bill.

Bland said he would not permit a vote on these in the House, but would turn them over to House conferees to take to conference for discussion in drafting the shipping section in its final form.

Some Change Views

The day's debate brought speakers to the floor for repeal who formerly voted for an embargo, and vice versa.

Representative Barton (Republican), of New York, a former repeal advocate, joined the opposition attack on the bill to assert that repeal might "signal the start of a real war."

"This is not the time for us to make a move in what certainly up to date is the most stupid, the most crazy, the most cock-eyed war in history," declared Barton.

"I say that the longer we postpone our action here, the more the people in Europe will be asking: 'What is the purpose of this war? What are its objectives? Why cannot our statesmen make as good a peace for us right now as they can make after our cities are crumbled into ruins and millions of our sons are dead.'"

But Representative Gifford (Republican), of Massachusetts, deserted the embargo ranks to declare for repeal.

"Can we say that we stand for democracy and support a motion that gives joy to the dictators?" asked Gifford, in opposing the embargo motion.

Only seven Republicans last session voted with Administration forces against the Vorys limited arms embargo. Last night leaders said repeal gains from Republican ranks should more than double this total to a minimum of 15 Republicans for repeal.

"Safe" Repeal Majority

In last session's vote, 61 Democrats voted for the limited embargo. Leaders said a sufficient number of these have altered their stand to give a "safe" majority for repeal, when coupled with Republican votes and support from a majority of the 42 who were absent on the last test. It was estimated in one quarter that the Administration could lose 40 Democratic votes and still win by a majority of 40. While the Administration hopes to win by that much and more, all whip polls have fixed a "minimum" much lower.

Bland's submission to the House conferees of new shipping amendments was an eleventh hour effort to ease somewhat statutory restriction on movement of the Merchant Marine imposed by the Senate bill.

While the Senate section prohibits movement of American ships to belligerents in Europe and to the northern Canadian coast, Bland asked that the conferees rely instead on Presidential discretion to regulate shipping.

The Virginia Democrat presented a number of alternative proposals for less rigid provisions should this discretion for the President be denied, together with "clarifying" proposals. One of these would permit an American ship which had started its voyage to a belligerent port before the act becomes law to complete it. The Senate bill exempts from the bill's penalties only those ships which have sailed seven days prior to enactment.

Would be Costly

Appraising the cost of the Senate ship restriction, Bland said they would mean the withdrawal of 92 American ships from the affected area, and the abandonment of eight foreign trade routes in which the Government has invested $195,061,-

A Pointed Demand

000. He said "lay-up" cost of vessels withdrawn would run about $4,200,000 a year, and gross revenue lost to the American Merchant Marine would approximate $52,500,000.

Representative McCormack was loudly applauded when he called on the United States to withdraw its ambassador from Russia in reply to Molotoff's criticism of United States policy.

McCormack said Molotoff had spoken against repeal in the presence of Stalin and before "1,300 delegates controlled by the dictator."

"Did he do that for the best interests of the United States?" asked McCormack. "Did he do that for the best interests of religion and the ennobling things for which it stands?

"Communism is the arch enemy of religion and every ideal for which decent mankind stands—Communism that would try to stop you and me from exercising our religious conscience—Communism that went into Poland only a few weeks ago and took over 13,000,000 of liberty-loving and religion loving people, Catholics, Protestants and Jews. Today no churches exist in Poland. Within the past few weeks came from Moscow itself the statement that Catholic priests were murdered with the lying reason therefore that they were risisting the Communist army. They were murdered in Catholic Poland, in Christian Poland for the same reason that they have been murdered for 20 years in Soviet Russia, priests, ministers, rabbis, because they were messengers of God and doing the work of God on earth."

Maas Against Repeal

McCormack said that "if we do not repeal the arms embargo, we not only help Communist Russia but Nazi Germany."

Representative Maas (Republican), of Minnesota, who voted against the embargo last session, declared against repeal, terming it an un-neutral act "for which we will have to answer on the battlefield before the European war is over."

Speaking fo repeal, Chairman Sumers, of the House Judiciary committee, said he believed at least 80 per cent of the American people were opposed to Hitler and what he stands for.

Representative Treadway (Republican) of Massachusetts, said America should follow a strict neutrality policy, by retaining the embargo on arms and enacting rigid cash and carry provisions. The Massachusetts Republican said he recognized "that our sympathies—and, to some degree, our interests—lie with the democracies of England and France."

Representative Bender (Republican), of Ohio, said retention of the embargo "will furnish our people with additional time to determine their ultimate views.'

Deserting Republican colleagues to plead for repeal, Representative Plumley (Republican), of Vermont, said it was "ridiculous to say elimination of the embargo would invite retaliation from belligerents.

'Little Steel' Plan Crushed, Inquiry Told

Depression Thwarted Hopes of Merger, Committee Hears

By the Associated Press

The Monopoly Committee heard yesterday that the depression of the early thirties had frustrated a proposal to merge a group of "little steel" companies into a giant corporation second in size only to the $2,000,000,000 United States Steel Corporation.

E. B. Greene, president of the Cleveland-Cliffs Co., and Crispin Oglebay, president of Oglebay, Norton & Co., both of Cleveland, outlined the proposal. Among the companies expected to participate, they said, were Wheeling Steel Corporation, Otis Steel Co., Republic Steel Corporation, Inland Steel Co., and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.

The two presidents, both of whose companies are engaged in selling iron ore, said they had brought their competing companies together in hopes of playing a part in the consolidation that failed.

Begin Study of Industry

The committee began yesterday a study of the iron ore and steel industry.

Greene and Oglebay said their firms were "substantial competitors" when Cleveland-Cliffs acquired control of Oglebay-Norton stock in May, 1930, and that they tried to avoid publicity on this transaction.

With both presidents testifying at the same time, A. H. Feller, Justice Department attorney directing testimony, submitted a letter from files of the Cliffs Iron Co., which said the affiliation would help minimize "tendencies which have prevented iron ore producers from getting a fair price for their product."

Feared Publicity

The letter also warned that too much, "publicity might result in opposition on the part of the public or the consumers to a move which they may construe as tending toward an undue control of prices."

Committee members questioned Greene and Oglebay about this letter and their views on the affiliation of rival concerns.

Oglebay, refering to the proposed steel merger, said his firm "wanted to cooperate in this movement, and thought Cleveland Cliffs would play a large part." He added that "we had more to gain by sitting around the table than sitting on the outside."

Sold Only to U. S. Steel

Greene said his company hoped to play the same part in the planned merger as the Oliver Iron Mining Co. "did for United States Steel." Earlier testimony developed that Oliver Iron Mining Co. sold ore only to United States Steel affiliates and was the largest ore tonnage handler in the rich Lake Superior district.

"The merger failed to take place and our two companies have acted as though there was no ownership of one in the other, and have operated independently," Greene added. In response to questions he said the failure was "largely due to the depression."

The hearing opened with a brief statement by Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General and the Government's chief antitrust official, recalling that President Roosevelt had asked the monopoly committee to study "concentrated economic power" that resulted in "rigid prices and fluctuating pay rolls." Arnold said these were "characteristic" of the iron and steel industry.

"The Metal of War"

The antitrust attorney said that "steel is the metal of war as well as peace," adding that because of the European war, "we, as neutrals, have a great task before us—to see to it that our economy is not distorted because of someone else's war."

The large committee room was filled with leaders in the steel industry and their staffs who listened intently to opening testimony. Among these were E. R. Stettinus, chairman, and B. J. Fairless, president, of U. S. Steel.

Rockefeller Drives Last Rivet In His $100,000,000 Center

John D. Rockefeller (left) was the Nation's richest riveter yesterday, as he drove a final silver rivet into a bad guess that became a $100,000,000 success—Rockefeller Center—12 acres of office buildings, theaters and broadcasting studios in New York City. Fourteenth Building Will Complete Prodigy Child of the Depression; Financier Pleads for Peace at Ceremony

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 1.—The Nation's richest riveter, John D. Rockefeller, jr., today hammered a final silver spike into a bad guess that became a $100,000,000 success.

The project is Rockefeller Center—born in the depression to occupy some white-elephant real estate—and the site, the fourteenth and final building in the three-block skyscraper cluster in midtown Manhattan.

Before a crowd of several hundred in the flag-draped unfinished lobby of the building, at Forty-eighth street and Sixth avenue, the silvery-haired financier donned a pair of workman's gloves and, as a "clincher," Mike Dooley, rammed a red-hot silver alloy rivet through one side of a bare girder, banged it fast with a pneumatic hammer.

In one of his rare utterances on public affairs, Rockefeller declared:

"The businessmen of this country want peace—peace among themselves, peace with Government, peace with labor. . . .

"I say with confidence that the earnest desire of the great majority of businessmen throughout the length and breadth of the land is that this country shall keep out of war.

"We should, as a people, free ourselves forthwith from any legislative enactments that may prevent our freedom of action in connection with whatever international situations may arise."

The new structure, a 20-story office building, completes a 12-acre array of buildings totalling more than a half a mile in height and including the world's largest office building (the massive 70-story RCA building), the world's fastest elevators (1,400 feet a minute) and the world's largest indoor theater (the Radio City Music Hall).

It all came about because the debacle of 1929 caught even Rockefeller a little off base.

He had dreamed of a huge center for the Metropolitan Opera Company and had obtained land for it. The depression knocked the opera's plans galley-west, and Rockefeller was left with a plot of land on which the rent was $3,000,000 a year and the income only $300,000.

To save himself, he conceived an unprecedented center of business and entertainment, selling the Radio Corporation of America one of the biggest leases on record as the nucleus for the center.

The first ground was broken in July, 1931; the final building will be ready for occupancy next March.

The center now houses over 1,600 tenants and 25,000 workers; 100,000 other people go in and out of it every day; and it was visited this year by an additional half million tourists, making it New York's most popular sight.

Airlines Continue Summer Flights

New York, Nov. 1 (AP).—For the first time in airline operations in the United States, passenger transports between New York and the West Coast this year will maintain their summer frequency of schedules until December.

Heretofore schedules have been curtailed about November 1 to accommodate the drop in passenger traffic, attributed to a fear of winter flying.

Parcel Post To Reich Halted

Postmaster General James A. Farley last night suspended parcel post to Germany, Czecho-Slovakia and Danzig until further notice, stating that disruption of transportation made the order necessary.

"Until otherwise instructed," he said, "all postmasters will refuse to accept parcel post packages . . . as services cannot be conducted as provided by agreements with those countries."

Traffic Aide Is Charged With Speeding

Eldridge Is Cited In Connection With August Accident

Papers charging him with driving at an unreasonable speed were sworn to at Police Court yesterday against Assistant Director of Traffic Maurice O. Eldridge as a result of a three-car collision on August 8 in which two persons were hurt.

A similar charge also was placed against Allan C. Whitlock, 17, of 5910 Cedar parkway northwest, diver of one of the other machines.

Policeman J. W. Baxter, Seventh Precinct, who investigated the accident, which occurred at Forty-fourth street and Cathedral avenue northwest, swore to the papers at the direction of Assistant Corporation Counsel James Reilly.

Reilly first investigated the crash and then took the witnesses before Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal. He returned the case to Police Court for action.

According to police, Eldridge's automobile was in collision with one operated by Whitlock, with Whitlock's machine in turn striking that of Kathleen Duncan, 17, of 6805 Forty-fifth street, Chevy Chase.

Donald Mathias, 17, of 3718 Manor street northwest, passenger in Whitlock's car, and Mary H. Davison, 6306 Forty-fifth street, passenger in Miss Davison's machine, were treated at Georgetown Hospital.

Danish Training Ship, Week Out of Baltimore, Ties Up Here So Naval Cadets May See Sights

Captain Explains That When There's No Wind, You Wait

The Danmark, one week out of Baltimore, slid to her dock at the Navy Yard yesterday and lay like a painting with her masts against the sky.

Training ship for Denmark's future merchant marine officers, she came around a point off the Navy Yard, swung under motor power with a Navy launch ahead and a Navy tug beside her, past Admiral Farragut's "damn the torpedoes" Hartford, and nosed to a pier.

Her seamen, averaging 17, but some are 15—had clambered like cats from the high riggings and returned the salutes American sailors gave from the docks. Someone squeezed an automobile horn. The sailors caught the thrown ropes, the gangplank went down and Capt. Knud Lauritz Hansen stepped ashore to be greeted by Commander William R. Terrell, aid to the Navy Yard commandant.

The Danish boys gaped at the city, came to the rail and talked to the American sailors. Then they swung to work at the rigging. And back in the captain's paneled salon, glasses with a dark continental drink were set for visitors and the captain said:

"We left one week ago from Baltimore. But sailing ships always arrive in the end. If there is no wind, we wait for the wind. Be sure that the wind, sometime, will come."

Local Danes were there as a reception committee, an historic seagoing pride in their eyes. The captain said the Danmark certainly would be here until Monday—then off for Puerto Rico.

"The boys do all the work," he said. "They make sails. Everything is done here by hand. There is one year in sailing, three years in steam; two and a half years in officers' training school, compulsory service in the navy, then . . . We train sailors."

Facing Poverty, Man and Wife Plunge to Death Together

Take Final Fling On Remnant of Depleted Fortune

At Dawn, Couple Leaps From Window Of New York Hotel

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 1.—Their money gone, their future without hope, and with only their love of 15 married years remaining, a New York couple faced toward the dawn today, and stepped to death together from the windows of their twenty-seventh floor hotel room.

Samuel Walker, 40, and his wife, Anna, 36, had never wanted to be separated; their heads were touching when detectives found their bodies on the roof of a fifth floor extension.

For weeks their plight had become increasingly desperate. Once they had all they wished for; a nice home, money, presentable clothing. Unfortunate business deals stripped them of money. Illness intervened. Saturday they were $91 in arrears for rent. Food was low. There still remained a few dollars.

They packed their best clothes—of good quality, but worn thin—in a suitcase, left the rest in their furnished rooms.

They went to the Hotel New Yorker, registered as "Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wilson, of Detroit, Mich.," took a room from the windows of which they could watch the sun rise. Over the week-end, they enjoyed themselves.

Today, their money was all but gone. They stood for a long time before the two windows of the room, smoking and talking. Beneath each window, cigarette ends littered the floor.

As dawn streaked the sky, they stepped to the ledges of the adjoining windows, poised for a moment—and leaped.

Early workers, hurrying through the streets saw their bodies twisting through the air.

Detectives found a dollar in their room, and a few worn clothes.

From Mrs. Helen Yeakel, of West New York, N. J., police learned Mrs. Walker had visited her last week, giving her a few trinkets, and talking of suicide.

"We thought we had persuaded them to drop the idea," said Mrs. Yeakel. "They were extremely devoted to each other."

'Shop Early' Drive Advanced a Week

The "Shop Early—Mail Early for Christmas" campaign, sponsored by the retail stores group of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, has been advanced a week because of the new Thanksgiving date proclaimed by the President.

The merchants and Post Office representatives made the decision yesterday after a conference. Christmas buying always starts as soon as the Thanksgiving Day celebration is over, said the Association's statement. The committee decided to open the toy departments of the stores on November 11 and Christmas windows from November 19-24.

Germans Report Successful Completion Of Deal for Trade

By Witt Hancock
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Nov. 1.—Russia today welcomed two new regions, fruits of the German-Soviet partition of Poland, into membership in the Soviet Union.

The supreme Soviet, Russia's parliament, cheered the first appearance of delegates from the two regions—White Russia and the western Ukraine—carrying red banners into the chamber where the two houses of parliament met in extraordinary joint session.

Josef Stalin was among the delegates who heard a Ukrainian representative declare "Our first words are words of gratitude to Comrade Stalin."

At about the same time it was reported in semiofficial German circles that a Nazi economic delegation had successfully completed negotiations for the purchase of major Russian items and was returning to Berlin tomorrow.

Expected to accompany the delegation by plane was German Ambassador Count von Schulenberg, summoned home to "report."

(Through her delegation to Moscow, Germany hoped to arrange the purchase of foodstuffs and raw materials to offset the British blockade.)

It was learned that a separate group of German industrialists would remain in Moscow presumably until November 13, when Herr K. Schnurre, German foreign office expert who headed the economic delegation, was expected to return here.

Despite the German claims of successful negotiations, it was rumored in diplomatic circles that the Germans were encountering difficulties in their trade talks. Informed Germans, however, said the delegation was returning to Berlin because of the impending celebrations of the twenty-second anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution—November 6-8.

Observers, however, noted that the celebrations do not begin until four days after the scheduled departure and end five days before Schnurre's expected return.

Informed circles also indicated that Schnurre's delegation had urgent business to take up with a similar Russian group now in Berlin.

Meanwhile, Moscow awaited the return of a Finnish delegation which was en route for the third in a series of talks on Russian demands for territorial concessions.

The Finnish delegation, headed by Dr. Juho Kusti Paasikivi, was expected some time tomorrow.

(Helsinki sources expressed belief the Finnish delegation was prepared to say "no" to the Soviet demands.)

The Communist Party newspaper, Pravda, called the Soviet proposals "just and noble" and said of certain sections of the foreign press that "lying penpushers are trying to poison our relations with Finland."

Russia May Quit League

London, Nov. 1 (INS).—Possibility Russia will shortly withdraw from the League of Nations loomed strongly tonight, according to diplomatic sources.

Great Britain and France, it was learned, are striving to call off the forthcoming meeting of the League Council which is scheduled to be called into session sometime before the December Assembly session.

Outstanding among the reasons for such action is the growing Anglo-French fear that a League Council meeting might result in diplomatic embarrassment or even fist-fights, since Poland still holds a semi-permanent seat.

According to Russian circles, Soviet Ambassador Maisky at first objected to British government requests for cancellation of the Council, but now is consulting with Moscow.

Key Points in Russia's Demands

The seven major points in demands made by Soviet Russia on Finland. (1) Russians seek domination of the Rybachi Peninsula, a key position in the Arctic. (2) In this area of Soviet Karelia the Finns have been promised land to compensate for the area they may be forced to yield. (3) The Soviet asks for a strip of the Karelian Isthmus near Leningrad. (4) The border between Russia and Finland would be demilitarized. (5) Finns would give up a small strip of territory near the entrance to the Gulf of Finland. (7) Russia would withdraw objections to fortifications of the Aaland Islands by Finland

[A New York Times dispatch from Bermuda said the admiralty confirmed that a tramp steamer was attacked by a submarine off Nova Scotia. The admiralty did not release the name of the ship or any details pertaining to the crew.—Editor's note.]

The Bibb scoured the sea in that vicinity and then turned north to search. It reported a gale from the south.

The bad weather forced two Coast Guard airplanes which joined the search to turn back to their bases at New York and Cape May, N. J.

The Coast Guard had the cutters Hamilton, Campbell, Chelan, Argo and Duane in the search as well as the Bibb.

The Navy joined the quest with the cryptic comment that its ships were helping in "saving life at sea." The number of Navy vessels sent out was not announced.

The Coulmore, which called at Boston with a cargo of Russian coal September 9, sent out her distress calls Tuesday night. Shore stations heard them faintly at 10:50 p. m., Eastern standard time, and they became plainer until 1:38 a. m., when nothing more was heard.

The ship, built in 1936, was owned by the Dornach Shipping Co. and plied between North American, Cuban and European ports.

Airline Objects To Rival Proposal For Ocean Service

By the Associated Press

Pan-American Airways raised vigorous objections Tuesday to a proposal of American Export Airlines to establish a competing transatlantic line.

Gerald Brophy, counsel for the applicant, told a Civil Aeronautics Authority examiner the American Export Lines, parent company, had successfully served the territory by steamship for 20 years and had been preparing for its air service for more than three years.

Henry J. Friendly, Pan-American counsel, said he knew of "no previous case of anything like this magnitude, where the authority has had to pass upon an application by a new company to institute an entirely new operation paralleling the line of an existing air carrier which is ready, willing and able to furnish such additional service as is required." He added:

"Whether to allow such a dilution of the traffic available to an existing carrier would be a most serious question, even in the case of an operation where neither the existing nor the proposed service required governmental assistance."

Friendly said Pan-American had been preparing for transatlantic service for ten years and planned to make four round trips weekly instead of the two now authorized."

Davis Elkins Sued For $32,500 Fees Over 1920 Sales

Former United States Senator Davis Elkins was sued in the District Court yesterday for $32,500 in fees by lawyers and an accountant who contended they helped him save $1,000,000 in taxes.

Elkins, who now lives at 2029 Connecticut avenue northwest, was senator from 1919 to 1925. His father, Stephen Elkins, also was a senator from West Virginia, serving from 1891 to 1911.

Bernard J. Reis, New York accountant, filed one suit against Elkins. Attorneys Edward F. Colladay, Joseph C. McGarraghy, Stephen F. Colladay, Milton H. Wallace and David C. Colladay filed another. The suits asked $16,250 each.

The plaintiffs claimed Elkins retained Reis in 1920 to settle excess profit tax claims resulting from the $9,000,000 sale of mining, railroad and business properties by the elder Elkins. The layers were retained to help Reis, the suits said, and their researches in the following 16 years relieved Elkins of $1,000,000 in taxes. Reis said he was paid $31,500 of a bill for $47,750.

Planes to Join Atlantic Watch On Neutrality

Squadron Is Assigned; Puerto Rico, Key West Base Contracts Are Let

By John G. Norris

The Navy revealed yesterday that East Coast naval forces will be strengthened by placing airplanes aboard battleships of the Atlantic squadron.

Orders have been issued, it was said, for the formation of the Fifth Observation Squadron at Norfolk, Va., and its assignment to the dreadnaughts New York, Texas and Arkansas, backbone of American sea forces in the Atlantic. The squadron will join other planes operating on neutrality patrol.

The announcement followed two other moves to augment naval defense in the Atlantic. A contract was awarded for an $8,330,000 air base at San Auan, Puerto Rico, and the old ship base at Key West, Fla., was reopened to serve as an operating center for destroyers on neutrality patrol.

Ships Now Equipped

Aircraft have not been assigned to East Coast battleships in recent years, officials said, although each division of big ships in the main fleet carries a squadron of planes. The Atlantic squadron vessels, which normally train reserves and midshipmen, are equipped for planes, and formerly carried them.

The Puerto Rican air base is viewed as the most important of a chain of such stations in outlying United States possessions, voted by Congress last year. Contracts have already been let for two bases in Alaska and several others in mid-Pacific. Yesterday's award went to two Baltimore firms, the Arundel Corporation and the Consolidated Engineering Co., as a joint venture on a cost-plus fixed-fee basis.

Guantanamo Bids Opened

Bids were opened yesterday on a new pier and wharf at the Naval station, Guantanamo, Cuba, which is also being strengthened. The Frederick Snare Corporation of New York, was low bidder with an offer of $303,548. Low bidder for construction of a 112-foot caisson for repairing the Panama Canal, was the Case Construction Co., of San Pedro, with a tender of $911,933.

The naval base at Key West—an important naval center years ago—was closed in 1933 due to economy reasons.

Officials did not disclose the number of planes assigned to the new plane squadrons. Normally, it is understood, battleships are equipped to carry four such craft. Commander of the unit is Lieut. Comdr. B. C. McCaffree.

Northern Fogs, Secrecy Shroud City of Flint's Movements

By the Associated Press

Bergen, Norway, Nov. 1.—The American freighter City of Flint, expected to pass Bergen tomorrow, was believed tonight to be holding a blockade-dodging course southward along the irregular coast of Norway.

Norwegian authorities kept secret any information they might have about the freighter, which is being sailed by a German prize crew, but shipping circles here expressed the belief the ship was nearing Bergen. This view was based on calculations of the time required after she left Tromsoe at 4 p. m. Monday.

The last direct information of the vessel was the report of her being sighted yesterday off Lodingen Light, 600 miles north of here, en route from Murmansk, Soviet Russian Arctic port, to some port in Germany.

Shipping circles held it was unlikely the City of Flint would put in here, since Bergen is a naval base. Informed Norwegians said if the vessel stopped here she would be interned.

The last time she was sighted the City of Flint was followed by a Norwegian destroyer to make certain regulations for her passage through Norwegian waters were observed.

Dutch Put 500 Towns Under Army Rule to Curb Espionage

By the Associated Press

The Hague, Nov. 1.—Martial law was declared today in key defense communities of the Netherlands by royal decree.

The action was taken to bolster military defenses and put a curb on espionage.

No large cities were affected by the proclamation, which placed about 500 of the nation's 1,200 towns and villages as well as other strategic areas under martial law.

These towns and villages are scattered over the entire country, but most of them are situated along the German-Netherlands frontier, the northern and western seacoast districts and in the regions which would be inundated in case the country were invaded by belligerent armies.

Precautionary Measure

The decision to invoke martial law was said in informed circles to be a precautionary measure connected with Netherlands defense plans and not because of any external threats of violation of the nation's neutrality.

Martial law was invoked in the World War, but the present decree covers a greater area.

Authoritative quarters said the decree was not directed against the liberty of the press and that no action was contemplated toward suppression of any publications.

The military is empowered to suspend all civil functions but officials said military measures would be taken only in case of emergency.

It was pointed out that while martial law was put into force in the first days of the World War in 1914, the military never exercised the right to supersede civil authority.

Test Water Defenses

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Nov. 1.—While British planes today were photographing those areas of northwestern Germany in proximity to neutral countries where the concentration of troops has been reported in the past two weeks, Belgium and the Netherlands were "testing" their water defenses again.

The first "tests"—this continues to be the official description—occurred towards the end of September when the German high command began transferring divisions from the Eastern to the Western Front.

The "tests" are more extended in Holland than in Belgium and they are being made especially in the Amersfoort district. It is explained that the sluices are being raised in certain regions "in order to staurate the soil," thus facilitating rapid flooding to a suitable depth if and when it should be required.

Water Near Canal Tops

Amersfoort is located near the southermost point of the Zuider Zee in the center of an elaborate network of canals and dikes. For some time the water level in all these canals has been maintained wtihin a few inches on the top of the banks.

While these "normal precautions" are being taken by the Dutch authorities there is some speculation here on the reasons for the sudden German restrictions on dispatches from the Berlin correspondents of Dutch and other neutral newspapers.

Since the war began the French press has been filled with reproductions of such dispatches, but since last week-end the flow has ceased.

Instead, there are manifestly inspired reports insisting that the German high command does not envisage major operations before spring and reiterating the determination not to violate neutral territory. The effect of all this, it is remarked here, is rather nullified by the inclusion of the casual phrase, "the German General Staff is not in the habit of publishing its plans in advance."

the countries listed. They included Poland, which Germany and Russia have since partitioned. They included, also, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, from which Russia has recently obtained concessions permitting establishment of air and naval bases on their territory.

It was when Russia, after obtaining these concessions, called on Finland for a conference that was generally interpreted to threaten encroachments on Finnish sovereignty as well, that President Roosevelt and the rulers of Denmark, Sweden and Norway sent individual appeals to Moscow that she make no demands on her small neighbor that would result in hostilities.

Molotoff on Tuesday, as a result, accused Mr. Roosevelt of intervening by lending "moral support" to Finland.

Early promptly replied at his press conference yesterday morning.

Embargo Issue Raised

Evidencing suspicion that the Molotoff criticism was designed to influence the neutrality action in Congress, he said Molotoff apparently had directed his remarks at Mr. Roosevelt's encouraging of Finland.

"But it would appear," Early added, "that he had something else in mind, because almost in the concluding paragraph of his speech he raises the question of the neutrality embargo, which if you recall, was timed for an important vote in the House yesterday."

Molotoff had said that repeal of the embargo, permitting sales of munitions to all-comers on a cash-and-carry basis, would "intensify, [illegible] and protract" the European war.

[illegible] referred to by Early was on adoption of a rule sending the neutrality bill to conference. Ie resulted in a victory for forces favoring repeal.

French Report Repelling Nazi Raid on Village

Attack by 1,000 Is Held Off; Dispatches Note New Inventions

By the Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 1.—A German force of 1,000 men which attempted to encircle an unidentified French frontier village on the northern flank of the Western Front was reported today to have been driven off by French fire.

Artillery bombardment lasting an hour was said to have preceded the attack. The French had abandoned a small advance post in the village before the attack reached it.

The Germans held a cluster of houses for a short time before a battalion of poilus counterattacked and drove the Nazis back to their original line, the French reported. There was no announcement of casualties.

Actiity "Habitual"

The French general staff reported "habitual activity" during the day by infantry units on both sides.

Military dispatches from the Moselle and Nied River sectors and from the Warndt Forest told of French outposts halting German raids in those areas.

The Germans attacked yesterday in an area extending from west of Saarlouis to the Blies River Valley, east of Saarbruecken, the dispatches said.

New Inventions Ready

The French reported they took six prisoners west of Forbach in the Warndt Forest, where small strategic posts on German soil were held by the French to dominate Saarbruecken, industrial capital of the Saarland, with their heavy guns.

Military sources said new war inventions were ready to bolster France's armies. They said scientific perfection of modern equipment had provided hitherto undisclosed aids to France's strong forts, tanks and new and powerful guns.

The inventions were said to have been developed by army technicians with scientists and engineers drafted for national defense service under a new committee coordinating research.

The French already have shown publicly new equipment, including huge fortress tanks and "mystery" guns.

French Prepare to Buy Abroad

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Nov. 1.—The government today appointed an interministerial economic committee which will have charge of all buying abroad. Principal among the orders will be armaments and raw materials.

A decree appearing today regulating civilian service supplies in wartime makes it clear that it will be a long time before France will be obliged to issue food cards.

The new decree provided measures to guard against food profiteering and food corners and provided machinery for economical measures when they are needed.

German Efforts For Puppet Polish Regime Collapse

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Nov. 1.—Nazi efforts to form a puppet Polish government in Warsaw have failed—they could not find a Pole ready to assume the premiership.

They had counted on several Polish politicians who cooperated with the German occupation authorities in the great war, but were met with refusal.

Stanislaw Studnicki, persistent advocate of a common Polish-German crusade against Bolshevik Russia, could not accept the offer now that Hitler and Stalin are friends.

Prof. Jan Kucharzewski, premier of the first Polish cabinet during the German occupation of 1917, also declined. He, too, is anti-Soviet. The third candidate, Stanislaw Estreicher, was ready to accpet under conditions—the German troops to evacuate the future protectorate territory; the military and civilian authorities to be Polish; the requisition of Polish property to cease and payment to be made for confiscated goods exported to the Reich; Polish war prisoners to be freed. The Nazis refused and negotiations were ended.

Rationing Order Stirs Storm in Britain

feel that food supplies are unreliable."

The government should postpone the rationing date indefinitely, said the Express, adding:

"Morrison should remember that it is madness to restrict food consumption until he has built an efficient system for the distribution of food supplies."

The Daily Herald admitted that food rationing was in a general sense a good thing for rich and poor, but stated that it required a democratic method of administration.

"The compromise measure now announced by Morrison," the Herald said, "is an odd and unsatisfactory conclusion to the government's succesive vaccilations."

Photos of the amount of bacon and butter allowed under the rationing plan, 4 ounces of each per week, were published in most of the papers.

Sugar May Be Restricted

The British press ignored Morrison's hint that sugar might be rationed later, and paid scant attention to Churchill's announcement of the presence of two Nazi raiders in the Atlantic.

These ships are so heavily armed, so well protected and so speedy that only the biggest and fastest of Britain's mighty fleet can be sent against them.

This disclosure was accompanied by the announcement that another British freighter had been sunk by a German submarine in the Atlantic. It was the Lamport & Holt steamer Bronte, a vessel of 5,317 tons. The crew of 40 and one passenger were rescued and landed at a British port. The announcement said the attack occurred some days ago.

Another development in Commons today was the demand that the government give assurances that no secret agreements between the allied powers of Britain and France, or with others, that might hamper peace settlement, be undertaken.

Richard Butler, undersecretary for foreign affairs, stated that the government had no intention of taking any step that would prevent the attainment of satisfactory settlement at the conclusion of hostilities.

Morrison said:

"In view of the present volume of home produced and imported foods, the government at present feels that rationing need be confined only to bacon and butter. It is hoped that supplies of both will improve later."

England imports about 40 per cent of her bacon and dairy products from Holland and the Scandinavian countries, all of which would have to be shipped across the North Sea.

Churchill told Commons he had confirmation of the Deutschland raids from British sailors who were actually aboard the Nazi raider.

These sailors are believed to be the survivors of the British freighter Stonegate, reported sunk by a Nazi pocket battleship in the North Atlantic. They were transferred to the American freighter City of Flint, which was admittedly captured by the Deutschland.

Apparently, the British convoy system has worked to keep the activities of these battleship raiders at an almost incredible minimum. Only the Stonegate has been reported sunk by the Deutschland and the Clement by the raider operating in the South Atlantic.

Two British freighters would be regarded as a ridiculously low toll for two such powerful raiders. If that is the best they can do in this time, British observers point out, their raiding efforts are laughable.

Raider Lurked Off Spain

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Nov. 1.—James G. McConnochie, radio officer on the City of Flint, said in a broadcast speech tonight that the German pocket battleship Deutschland is overcrowded because of the number of prize crews she is carrying on the Atlantic.

He also confirmed what had long been thought in naval circles here—that the Deutschland was in Spanish waters when the war broke out.

The prize crew which the Deutschland put aboard the City of Flint, according to McConnochie, wore cap ribbons of different German warships, including the Emden. He said he was surprised by the knowledge the Deutschland crew had of the movement of British convoys, a statement which supports the theory widely held here that much information about the movement of British ships is being sent out from this country by Nazi agents.

Duke of Gloucester, Brother of the King, Shows He's a Real Soldier on Western Front

By Harold Denny.

Copyright by New York Times.

With the British Forces in France, Nov. 1.—Maj. Gen. the Duke of Gloucester, brother of King George VI, is a real soldier, performing important duties, and by no means mere royal ornament.

Several American correspondents learned this today when he was encountered in the parlor of a little French roadside cafe, after an inspection of the forward positions.

We had motored up to the area just behind the front line, where newly-arrived heavy artillery was being mounted in camouflaged positions, and the weather was about the nastiest since the war began. A cold rain was falling and the wind chilled everyone.

We took shelter in a little estaminet and ordered coffee and rum.

The door opened and in walked the Duke of Gloucester, accompanied by his personal assistant. The officer with us, to whose regiment the Duke of Gloucester once had been attached, made the introductions. There followed a general conversation in which the duke, who is usually diffident and reticent, exchanged jokes but could not be drawn out on military or political topics. He recited with relish a couplet now going the rounds of the front.

"Life may be long or it may be short.

"It all depends upon Gen. Gort."

He would venture no opinion on how, where or when Adolf Hitler might strike, parrying the question with the remark that he could not read Hitler's mind. Asked about the royal family, he said he had twice seen the Duke of Windsor in France.

The Duke of Gloucester is extremely unassuming and simple in manner. He was attired like any other staff officer—in a smartly-cut uniform and wearing the insignia of his own regiment, the Tenth Hussars, of which he is colonel-in-chief. He wore a macintosh and muddy "Newmarket boots"—stout, practical affairs of leather shoes and waterproof tops.

The Duke is clean-cut and good looking and appears much younger than his photographs would indicate.

The Duke of Gloucester's greatest interest is the army. He would like to be serving with his own regiment in the line. He entered it as a second lieutenant and, rising in seniority, advanced to major.

In his present post he is a liaison officer between the general staff and the troops in the line. This keeps him constantly on the go.

He drives himself. His chauffeur rode in the back seat when they left today.

The proprietress of the cafe was thrilled when we told her afterward the King's brother had been her guest.

Finns' Position Given by Erkko

justice toward either party cannot be sound or fortunate."

Mentioning the peace treaty of Dorpat by which Russia recognized the independence of Finland in 1920, and the later non-aggression treaty, Erkko said, "it is difficult to free ourselves from the impression there is a desire to disturb their foundations and that in a way calculated to call forth mistrust and uncertainty.

"This time, when it is desired to prevail upon us to enter into new treaties we have the right to ask what guarantees will be given us these new treaties shall be respected."

Finland, he added, desired to show confidence in Russia "although the wishes presented us seem to go very far and to be far too large."

"There is a limit to the compliance of every nation, also of the small nation," he went on. "There are values which even the small nation cannot sacrifice. When such essential values are in question, Finland knows which way she has to choose, however difficult that way may be."

Concerning Molotoff's action in disclosing Russian demands at a time when a Finnish delegation was entraining to give its answer, Erkko said:

"Nor can I help saying here that the course of action of the other party to the discussion in making public questions without consulting the other party easily produces a strange and peculiar atmosphere and makes a queer impression."

Molotoff's address, he added, presented a "picture only of the position taken by the Soviet," and did not illuminate these questions from the point of view of Finland's interests."

Erkko spoke after a temporary indecision early in the day when it was not certain the Finnish government would continue with the negotiations.

It was suggested the Finnish government, by allowing the mission to continue its journey, has indicated that it may fall in with the Soviet requirements.

Molotoff's disclosure of what the Russians are asking came as a bombshell to the Finns. So strongly did the foreign ministry react that a telegram was sent the delegation to get off the train before reaching the frontier.

At a cabinet session, however, the party favoring continuation of the talks gained the upper hand, and the order was cancelled before it reached Dr. Juho Paasikivi and V. A. Tanner, members of the mission. It was decided that nothing the Soviet premier had said warranted cancellation of the visit, although the communique issued today by the Finnish foreign office described his revelations as having "created a new situation."

The cabinet will not publish for the moment counter proposals the delegation took to Moscow. Despite official reticence, however, it is clear the cabinet is protesting Molotoff's insinuation that "certain foreign influences" are at work embroiling Finland with Russia. His warning that a Finnish refusal to accept Soviet demands may have serious consequences was considered to be sinister.

Hitler Polls His Ambassadors On Soviet Stand

Fuehrer Keeps Close Watch on Finnish Talks, Turkish Aims

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Nov. 1.—Germany started calling the roll of her ambassadors tonight to determine whether the war situation was altered by such developments as the Russian-Finnish negotiations, Russia's outline of her foreign policy and Axis relations with Turkey.

The German ambassador to Moscow, Count Freidrich Werner von der Schulenburg, was summoned home to make a report which an authorized spokesman said "certainly should be good news."

Nazi ambassador to Italy Hans-Georg Viktor von Mackensen already has submitted his observations on the significance of yesterday's shake-up in the Fascist leadership and Premier Mussolini's keen interest in Turkish maneuvers. He arrived from Rome earlier in the week.

As to Turkey herself, Ambassador Franz von Papen has been sent back to Ankara after reporting on the circumstances which drew Turkey into the British-French front after she had declined to make a pact with Russia.

Watched by Hitler

There were indications that the changing political situation in eastern Europe from Finland to the Dardanelles was being watched with closest attention by Adolf Hitler, and that he desired precise and direct reports from his diplomatic observers.

At the chancellery and the foreign office there was no surface indication that Germany is anything but satisfied with the Soviet declaration of neutrality which was made yesterday by Premier Molotoff, and which the Germans said they regarded as distinctly benevolent.

Officials ridiculd foreign reports that Germany was disappointed because Molotoff did not announce a military alliance with Germany.

"The truth is quite the contrary," observed the authoritative commentary, Dienst Aus Deutschland.

"Just as in the case of Italy, Germany did not for a moment express a wish for Russian military aid," the commentary said. "Instead, now as before, it feels itself strong enough to bring the test at arms with the western powers to a successful conclusion."

Chamberlain Warned

Berlin, Nov. 1 (U.P.).—Fuehrer Hitler's Nazi Party organ, Voelkischer Beobachter, tonight warned British Prime Minister Chamberlain that "our armed forces are burning to deal blows against Britain" that will bring an early end to the war and a German victory.

The Voelkischer Beobachter's threat—without mention of France—followed a recent statement by the Essener National Zeitung, organ of Marshal Goering, that the time is approaching for Germany's armed forces to "rain down" destruction on the British Isles.

Fr. Keelan Named Vice Provincial by Society of Jesus

The Rev. Vincent L. Keelan, S. J., professor of philosophy at Woodstock College, has been appointed vice provincial of the Maryland-New York province of the Society of Jesus, according to word received at Georgetown University yesterday.

He succeeds the Rev. James P. Sweeney, S. J., who had held the position for several years until his recent transfer to New York. Father Keelan, who is well known here, will be stationed at Georgetown University, having jurisdiction in the southern portion of the province.

A native of Baltimore, Father Keelan was educated at Loyola College there. He entered the Society of Jesus at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and was ordained at Georgetown University in 1922 by Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore.

Father Keelan taught four years at Fordham University and pursued his own graduate studies at the pontifical Gregorian University in Rome. He was assigned to Woodstock College, which is near Baltimore, as professor of philosophy in 1927. Woodstock College, a novitiate for Jesuits, is now affiliated with Georgetown University.

27 U. S. Ships Searched or Held By Belligerents in War to Date

English, French and Germans Stop American Vessels; Portions of Cargoes Confiscated Are Expected to Be Paid for

The State Department last night announced interference by belligerent warships with the voyages of six American ships, raising to 27 the total challenged, searched, sent into port, or seized since the outbreak of war in Europe.

Some of the six lost a portion of their cargoes, but it was understood here the seized products had been paid for by Britain or France or by their merchants.

"Injury to American vessels destined to European ports," the Department said, "has not resulted in the main from their diversion from the high seas to belligerent ports."

Tanker Is Challenged

The six cases reported by the State Department were:

The I. C. White, a tanker owned by the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, challenged by an unidentified cruiser September 7, when 15 miles off shore near Barranquilla, Colombia.

The Eglantine, owned by the Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., ordered to stop September 18 by a German submarine. She was told not to use her radio and to send her papers to the submarine for inspetcion. After an hour and 20 minutes the vessel was permitted to proceed, but advised not to use her radio for three hours.

The Meanticut, owned by Lykes Brothers, ordered by the British on October 23 to proceed to Oran to discharge certain Italian cargo. She was released October 27.

Two May Still Be Held

The West Gambo, owned by Lykes Brothers, with 750 bales of carbon black, ordered ashore by the French October 22. There was no word of her release.

The Endicott, owned by Lykes Brothers, with 2,276 bars of copper and 1,796 bags of carbon black, ordered ashore by the French on October 22. No word of her release has arrived.

The President Harding, owned by the United States Lines, portion of her cargo seized September 9 by the French, but the ship promptly released. The cargo, still under seizure on October 28, included 135 tons of copper, 34 tons of petroleum; hides, oil, coffee, tin plate and miscellaneous.

Texan to Head New Radio Chain

Chicago, Nov. 1 (A.P.).—Directors of the new Transcontinental Broadcasting System today elected John T. Adams, of Fort Worth, vice president of the Texas State network, to head the chain which they said might include as many as 100 independent stations.

William A. Porter, of Washington, a director and vice president of the chain, said Elliott Roosevelt had been "active in organizing the Trancontinental System but would not serve on the board of directors or as an officer."

Flier Gets Life Term

Macon, Mo., Nov. 1 (A.P.).—Making a surprise appearance in court, Ernest Pletch, 29-year-old Indiana amateur aviator, pleaded guilty late today to the murder of Carl Bivens, Brookfield, Mo., flying instructor, and was sentenced to life imprisonment by Circuit Judge Harry J. Libby.

McNary, Martin Clash on Time Of Adjournment

Republican Senate Leader McNary, of Oregon, yesterday clashed with his party's leader in the House, Rep. Martin, of Massachusetts, over the latter's demand that Congress remain in session after final action is taken on the neutrality bill.

As Martin issued a call to his colleagues in the House to vote against adjournment immediately after the neurality issue has been acted upon, McNary told newsmen he favored Congress calling it quits until the regular session which begins in January.

However Martin said his judgment was that the people want Congress to remain in session, "to devote itself to the difficult tasks of keeping this country out of war and improving our domestic situation." He noted there were some 9,000,000 persons still unemployed, and "our farmers in many sections are in real distress."

With one full century and nearly three quarters of another behind us, we Americans have developed democratic means and methods to solve our problems. Slow, sometimes, but effective always. Certainly in the light of current events in other parts of the world, we have ample reason to believe that the other fellow's notions are no improvement over ours.

The Community Chest idea is the American way of raising and distributing funds to alleviate suffering, build character, instill hope, and restore families to happy usefulness.

The annual campaign for the Community Chest to finance services of incalculable value to all of us is on. It is our American way of trying to bring the promise and guarantees of the Declaration of Independence into tangible form for those of our neighbors who are less fortunate than we.

Give---generously and graciously---it is the American way.

Bribery Denied In ½ Billion Ethyl Suit

Defunct Buffalo Firm Says Key Witnesses Kept Out of Court

By the Associated Press

Trenton, N. J., Nov. 1.—Six major corporations denied through counsel today charges they bribed or coerced witnesses to stay away from trial of a half-billion-dollar suit hinging on the alleged theft of the secret formula for making ethyl gasoline.

The Howard-Vaughan Co., a defunct Buffalo firm seeking to share in ethyl profits it estimated at $750,000,000, charged its two key witnesses were kept out of court by the "pernicious machinations" of the defendants, "their sleuths and their myrmidons."

A blanket denial of all charges was made by the defendants, the Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, General Motors Corporation, Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., the Ethyl Gasoline Co. and the E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co.

Charles S. MacKenzie, representing Howard-Vaughan, alleged before Vice Chancellor Buchanan that the "defendants" proffered a $5,000,000 bribe to Dr. William P. Gerlach, expert chemist of Beverley Hills, Calif., who he said controlled evidence which would prove the ethyl formula was stolen from Dr. Francis A. Howard, of Hoboken, president of Howard-Vaughan. MacKenzie said Dr. Gerlach refused the offer.

Gerlach, MacKenzie said, controlled "a canceled $1,000,000 bribery check" which he alleged the defendant Standard Oil companies and Socony-Vacuum paid as a bribe to a deceased Washington patent attorney to whom Dr. Howard had confided his formula back in 1916.

Calling the case a "stupendous fraud on one side or the other," Buchanan granted a postponement until December 4, with instructions to MacKenzie to have his witnesses in court personally or produce written testimony from them.

James D. Carpenter, of Jersey City, appearing for General Motors, offered an affidavit from Dr. Gerlach disclaiming any knowledge of a "check for $1,000,000."

400 Educators To Attend Parley On Pan America

More than 400 educators will attend a conference on Inter-American Relations in art to be held here next week the State Department announced yesterday.

Plans will be discussed for increasing exchange of professors and students among the American republics.

Delegates also will consider proposals for acquainting the United States with the writers of Latin America.

Representatives of medical organizations, hospitals and schools will discuss projects for cooperation with the other nations.

2 Women, Man, 90, Hurt in Falls at Safety Island

A recently erected safety island at Thirteenth and F streets northwest yesterday caused injuries to two middle-aged women and a 90-year-old man.

Manuel Fraile, 90, of 5111 Cathedral avenue northwest, was sent to Emergency Hospital in a taxi by Policeman R. M. Lawrenson, detailed to the intersection, after he suffered a misstep from the island and fell prone in heavy traffic. He was treated for abrasions of the face and right hand.

Mrs. Elda Dwyer, 50, of 3520 Connecticut avenue northwest, suffered a fractured left shoulder and cut knees when she fell at the traffic island. Another victim was Mrs. Adeline J. Carry, 52, of 3914 Harrison street northwest, who refused hospital treatment.

Marriage License Is Bill of Lading For Moving Child

New York, Nov. 1 (AP).—Regulations governing removals from the New York World's Fair grounds worked without a hitch today—until one couple tried to leave with their baby from the incubator infant exhibit.

A patrolman stopped them and said, "Lemme see your bill of lading."

The couple produced their marriage certificate, and got by.

General admission to the fair in 1940 definitely will be 50 cents, Hugh D. Gibson, chairman of the fair's board of directors, announced.

An authentic copy of the Magna Charta, which had been viewed by 14,000,000 persons, will be lent by the British concession to the Congressional Library at Washington for display.

New Copy of Lincoln Bronze Destroyed at Fair Shown Here

Interior Department To Get 15-Foot Statue, 'The Rail Joiner'

A new bronze cast of "The Rail Joiner," 15-foot statue of the young Lincoln, destroyed last April by New York World's Fair authorities, goes on exhibit today at the Corcoran Gallery.

The heroic figure will be given a permanent place in the court of the new Interior Building when the Corcoran exhibit closes November 21.

Removal of the original plaster cast from the Court of Peace the day before the fair's opening stirred a storm of protest in art circles. Louis Slobodkin had been commissioned to execute the Lincoln figure after a Nation-wide competition. His fee and the cost of materials brought the Government's investment in the work to $4,000.

Art critics called the statue's destruction "cruel," "stupid" and "cowardly." Fair officials said the figure was too big and that preview visitors "all scoffed at it."

Costs of making the second cast were met by the Treasury Department Fine Arts Section. The Corcoran exhibit, sponsored by the Fine Arts Section, includes a number of murals and pieces of sculpture prepared for Government buildings.

Taft Says War Would Endanger American System

Indianapolis, Nov. 1 (AP).—Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, told the Indianapolis Bar Association at a dinner last night "the danger of a complete and perhaps permanent change in our whole American system is a strong argument against war of any kind which is not forced upon us as a matter of defense."

"I do not say that the President should be stripped of emergency wartime powers," said the Ohio Senator. "Unfortunately, certain extraordinary powers are necessary in time of war."

Senator Taft asserted parenthetically that President Roosevelt "has shown an inclination to exceed his statutory authority."

"On October 3, 1939," the Senator said, "the President announced he had ordered the War and Navy Departments to ignore statutory prohibitions against budgetary deficits in carrying out his intention of spending money on housing and hospitalization necessitated in the increased armed forces and on the reconditioning of many destroyers."

Evan T. Davis Named Assistant District Attorney

Evan T. Davis, 35-year-old Washington born law clerk, yesterday was appointed assistant district attorney.

District Attorney Pine assigned Davis to present Government cases to the grand jury. Assistant District Attorney Murray, long-experienced in grand jury work, will work with Davis for a few weeks.

Davis is the son of the late Alfred A. Davis, G. P. O. employe. He attended Central High School and National University and was admitted to the bar 12 years ago. He served for a time as corporation counsel of Falls Church, Va.

For the last 18 months Davis has been law clerk to Justice Vinson, of the Court of Appeals. Previously he was law clerk to Chief Justice Martin.

U-Boat Warfare Turns SOS Into a Stutter

New York, Nov. 1 (AP).—The SOS, call of distress in peacetime, has became a rarity on the transatlantic ether waves and the wartime call of SSSSS has become commonplace. The string of S's means "submarine sighted or attacking."

Instead of dot-dot-dot, dash-dash-dash, dot-dot-dot—SOS in the international Morse code the radio operator unleashes dot-dot-dot repeated over and over to call for help.

Dr. Ray Bassler To Conduct Tour

Dr. Ray S. Bassler, geology curator of the Smithsonian Institution, will conduct a "dinosaur tour" of the District Sunday afternoon under auspices of the National Capital Parks office.

Private cars and buses will make the trip. Dr. Bassler will describe prehistoric sharks and dinosaurs, petrified wood and ancient mountains now worn to the level of Washington streets. The party will assemble at Thirty-sixth street and Prospect avenue at 2 p. m.

Eduard Lindeman To Address Meeting

The second of three lectures on "Social Forces Vital to Democracy" will be given at 11 a. m. today by Eduard C. Lindeman at the Chamber of Commerce. The series is sponsored by the Committee on Volunteer Service of the Council of Social Agencies. Lindeman will discuss anti-democratic organizations. Mrs. John Jay O'Connor is chairman.

Despondent over ill health Mrs. Addie L. Foltz, 64, of 1495 Newton street northwest, fired a bullet into her brain early yesterday at her home. She died several hours later at Emergency Hospital.

She was found by her son, Joseph Foltz, a postoffice employe. He told police his .32-caliber revolver was at her side. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Clumsy Impertinence

Premier Molotoff's transparent effort to bring pressure on the American Congress should be of material value in strengthening the majority which already seems assured for repeal of the arms embargo. There are a large number of Congressmen who will properly resent instructions from a Soviet official as to the way they should cast their votes.

It is easy to accept Comrade Molotoff's statement that the imminent repeal of the arms embargo "raises justified misgivings in Soviet Russia." The Communist regime, while remaining ostensibly neutral, is actually doing all that it can to insure a Nazi victory. Any development which would be objectionable to Hitler is by that token objectionable to Stalin. And there is no doubt that Berlin dislikes exceedingly the prospect of an American resumption of real neutrality, terminating the tacit assistance which the United States has been giving to the Nazi regime.

But Communist sympathy for Germany does not excuse an intimation by the Russian Premier that the fight in Congress for repeal of the embargo is backed by warmongers and profiteers. Any assertion so palpably false and unjust is likely to serve as a boomerang. The time has not yet arrived when Moscow's interpretation of the ideal foreign policy for the United States is a controlling influence at the Capitol.

There is no question of the intensity of the Communist campaign to maintain the arms embargo. The Daily Worker, the leading Communist organ in this country, yesterday rang the changes on the specious argument that "everybody who does not want this war prolonged must agree with Molotoff." And it further waxed bitter over "Wall Street's campaign in behalf of the Finnish reactionaries," a charge about as sensible as the assertion that war profits determine thinking on the embargo issue.

Strange bedfellows are grouped together in the camp of those endeavoring to keep the arms embargo. Comrade Molotoff, Bund Leader Kuhn and Representative Fish see eye to eye on this. But the intervention of alien elements is not helping the cause which Mr. Fish has in charge. Congress can still legislate without gratuitous advice from Moscow. And it is likely to prove this very shortly.

A Travesty Of Planning

The Government's suit to condemn a large area in the Northwest section for a new War Department Building suggests that there is something wrong with its land-acquisition policy in Washington. This site includes two large apartment houses that will have to be razed. Forward-looking city planning would have prevented the construction of large and costly buildings in an area destined for future Government use.

It is said that much of this site, south of Virginia avenue between Twenty-first and Twenty-third streets, is vacant and that it will be no more costly per square foot than other areas considered for the War Department Building. But other possible sites also include large apartment buildings that would have had to be condemned. By following a policy of taking over land only when it is ready to erect permanent buildings, Congress is forced to pay enormous prices that might be avoided with more intelligent planning.

Congress has authorized the purchase of the entire section bounded by Eighteenth and E streets and the Potomac River, as well as some squares north of E street. In addition to the War Department Building, a Navy Building is planned for this area. Yet a large part of the land ultimately to be taken over is still under private ownership and control, with only zoning restrictions upon its use. Two large apartments are now being completed in this area at a reported cost of $800,000.

When the Government begins to buy up this land, presumably it will take over these and other costly structures and eventually raze them. The huge losses resulting from this travesty of planning will in the last analysis fall upon taxpayers. Congress has designated this property for public use, yet it has done nothing to prevent its development by private owners. Exorbitant costs are an inevitable result of such ineptitude.

In 1930 Congress set up a fund that could be used for the purchase of sites within the area designated for future Government use. That fund enabled the Procurement Division of the Treasury to buy up sites when their development for private purposes seemed imminent. But this fund was abolished in 1933 and the Government has since followed the short-sighted policy now in effect.

At present it is impossible to prevent private owners from building on their own land unless public funds for its purchase are available. Either from indifference or lack of foresight, Congress permits costly structures to be built in areas where governmental developments are already approved and then pays to have those buildings destroyed. Publicity for this situation ought in itself to be sufficient to bring about a quick reform.

Hitler's Disciple

The profound similarities between the Nazi regime in Germany and the Communist regime in Russia have long been noted by students of political forms. Until recently, however, the two systems did seem to differ in one vital particular.

For six years Germany under Hitler has been pursuing an expansionist foreign policy, reaching fruition in the annexation of Austria, the destruction of Czecho-Slovakia's independence and the attack on Poland. During most of that time, however, Russia was professedly pursuing the opposite course. Her leaders never tired of denouncing aggressors and repeatedly declaring their nation's readiness to join with others in combating aggression.

This one seeming difference between the Soviet Union and the Third Reich has now been sunk without trace. Premier Molotoff's remarks to the Supreme Soviet Tuesday, in particular his references to Finland and Turkey, reveal that Stalin wholeheartedly underwrites Hitler's theory that small nations have no rights which great powers need respect.

The Soviet Union, said Molotoff, "is not only entitled but obliged to adopt serious measures to increase its security." To that end Russia has not only annexed part of Poland and established protectorates over Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. The Soviet state is also demanding concessions from Finland which would seriously impair, if not entirely destroy, the independence of that progressive democracy. In other words, the security of Finland does not count; that of Russia is paramount.

Molotoff makes much of the alleged danger to Leningrad arising out of the circumstance that this city is within gun range of the Finnish border. He insists, therefore, that Finland cede to Russia a strip of land to the north of Leningrad. Should Finland do so it would mean the destruction of Finland's "Maginot Line" in the narrow neck of land separating the Scandinavian democracy on the southeast from its Communist neighbor. Finland would then be as vulnerable to attack as was Czecho-Slovakia after the loss of the Sudetenland. At the same time Molotoff insists on Russia's right to build a naval base on Finnish territory in uncomfortable proximity to the Finnish capital, Helsinki.

What is sauce for the Russian goose is not, in Moscow's opinion, sauce for the Finnish gander. The same holds true of Turkey. That country has apparently sinned in Stalin's eyes for having "preferred to tie up its destinies with a definite group of European powers" (i. e., France and Great Britain). She has, therefore, says Molotoff, "definitely discarded her policy of neutrality and has entered the orbit of the developing European war."

Yet in that same speech the Soviet premier spoke with great satisfaction of the strengthening of Russia's political and economic relations with Germany, which is also a belligerent. The utter cynicism of this position is matched only by its monumental effrontery.

Sniping At Trade Pacts

While waiting for the House to act on the neutrality bill, the Senate devoted most of a brief session Tuesday to discussion of the reciprocal trade pacts.

A number of developments have recently brought this subject prominently to the fore. First of all, there has been the announced intention to conclude agreements with Argentina and Chile. The probability that a court test of the constitutionality of the reciprocal trade program will be sought by the Governor of Rhode Island has also added fuel to the fire of senatorial criticism. But perhaps the most important reason for the present attention given the trade pacts is that interest in our foreign trade policies has been stimulated by the debate on neutrality.

Since the outbreak of war in Europe the prospect of strengthening trade and political ties with Latin America has been a topic of general discussion. Agreements once regarded as primarily commercial in character have, in consequence, acquired an increasing political significance.

That, indeed, was evident before the outbreak of hostilities, notably in the case of negotiations with Brazil. The Senate naturally does not wish to surrender its treaty-making powers to another branch of the Government. Hence, to the extent that the trade agreements become instrumentalities for the achievement of political ends, they may increasingly become targets of senatorial attack.

In agreeing not to insist upon the right to ratify the Senate is, therefore, entitled to demand that the executive branch of Government respect its prerogatives and stick strictly to business when trade negotiations with foreign countries are undertaken.

Insurance Salesmanship

The salesmanship practices of some large life insurance companies were the subject of an interesting discussion in hearings before the Temporary National Economic Committee last week. Thomas I. Parkinson, president of the Equitable Life, eloquently defended sales campaigns as a means of spurring agent activities. He insisted that the agents like these campaigns. "And they will stand more talking than any group of human beings that I have ever come across," Mr. Parkinson added. "The work they do is missionary and it is a drain not only on the nervous system but on the emotions."

Mr. Gesell, counsel for the SEC, pointed out that many of the larger companies have abandoned sales campaigns on the ground that they result in writing business without regard to family requirements or the ability of the insured to pay.

The controversy over sales methods is merely one aspect of a much larger problem that is obviously in the minds of the TNEC investigators. They are concerned about the ultimate objectives of the large companies engaged in selling insurance. Should they, with the missionary zeal lauded by Mr. Parkinson, "pep up" their agents and test their efficiency by their ability to sell insurance in volume? Or should they, after a certain point has been reached, be content to restrict their business?

Mr. Parkinson admitted that his company could do business at a "very much lower net cost" if it were to restrict its activities. "What we are trying to do," he asserted, "is to give the widest possible coverage to the greatest number of people at a cost which they will stand."

Since the company headed by this witness now controls over $2,000,000,000 in assets, it is fair to ask as Mr. Gesell did, whether the cost of expanding the business yields advantages to new policyholders equal to the disadvantages which may follow from an indefinite increase in size.

The question is one which calls for serious study on the part of the policyholder who is the object of this expansionist zeal. His interest after all lies in buying no more insurance than he can afford and in paying as little as safety permits.

Those who believe in cutting overhead sales charges to the bone would deprive many people of valuable information such as the well-trained insurance salesman unquestionably imparts. On the other hand, the missionary zeal of insurance officials who make the goal of endeavor the fullest possible coverage, without regard for overhead cost, represents an equally undesirable extreme. Somewhere between these extremes lies the proper admixture of conservatism and restraint, which should determine sales policies. The testimony before the TNEC indicates that these underlying problems have not yet received all the attention that their social and economic importance deserves.

In Playful Spirit

At the Benjamin Franklin High School, in Philadelphia, Prof. John A. Snyder has long endeavored to amalgamate the "fighting spirit" with the study of mathematics. Students are divided into contesting teams, and classwork is transformed "into bitterly intense play." Last week a Federal Arts project mural of a football game was unveiled in Prof. Snyder's classroom to symbolize this method.

Just before the daily scrimmages with algebra and geometry, Prof. Snyder gives the boys a pep talk to put them into the mood required for a successful plunge through the binomial theorem, or for a forward pass along the hypotenuse of a particularly stubborn triangle. Now and then, the shrill peremptory blast of the whistle is heard in the classroom. Some player has been caught cribbing. His team is ruled offside and for a penalty placed at the bottom of the test.

It is logical to suppose that Prof. Snyder will in time carry verisimilitude to the point of providing cheering sections. Imagine, then, one of these mathematical Merriwells balanced gingerly on his intellectual toes and knuckles as the team lines up in formation for the pons asinorum. Imagine the do-or-die determination in his soul as he hears the chant, "We-want-a-demonstration! We-want-a-demonstration!" Or think of the tense silence that would fill that classroom when, with but a minute to play, a kick is attempted from placement into the square root of minus one.

Of course the inter-relationship of work and play is not a new discovery. There are those who say that our proud civilization is merely an extension of nursery games with building blocks and pieces of perforated steel; that modern business is merely a glorification of matching pennies and milk bottle tops; that modern statesmanship merely sublimates the juvenile instinct towards playing with fire.

Reversion To Polytheism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The interesting communication of T. H. R. in The Post of October 26 offers a possible solution of the problem stated, but would it really help the matter? For we are told on high authority that Satan is not divided against himself, and the "Other Department" would be equally unable to deal with contradictory appeals.

His communication brings to mind, however, a suggestion made during the first World War and still applicable: Why should not the belligerents lay aside Christianity for the duration of the war and go back to the classical or other racial pantheons? Christianity in theory is not well adapted to a state of war. (I admit that in ecclesiastical practice it has been used to conduct, and even to promote, many wars, but those episodes are not among the most edifying parts of ecclesiastical history.)

By reverting to polytheism, each nation could pick its own God, and they could go into battle each for his own side as enthusiastically as they did in the Trojan war. If a neutral may make a suggestion: Great Britain could take Neptune, of course, and perhaps Mercury, the god of businessmen. (The fact that the latter was also the patron of thieves would be no real objection.)

France could take Venus, perhaps Bacchus, though I fear he would have to remain international. Germany would naturally adopt Mars, but they have besides the whole Asgard pantheon, Odin, Thor and the rest, at their disposal; in fact, they have gone some distance toward claiming them already. Russia doesn't seem to want any gods, but they could probably find some pre-Christian Slavic deity at a pinch.

As a possible modification the belligerents might adopt some up-to-date form of the emperor worship of the Roman Empire. Germany seems already to have taken steps in that direction, and Russia could do it easily. England and France would be at a disadvantage; one could hardly imagine altars erected to a Divus Chamberlain or a Divus Deladier. But, after all, it was the dead emperors who were deified, and England has a long list, from Alfred the Great to Queen Elizabeth, who are sufficiently dead and sufficiently heroic, while France has Napoleon ready to hand, or if it was objected that Napoleon was really an Italian, they could find an undoubted Frenchman in the Sun King, Louis XIV.

Incidentally, now is a good time to recall and re-read Mr. Dooley's remarks on Prayers for Victory.

Catch Phrases

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A letter from an acquaintance in the West requests me to have a little chat with his Congressman about the pending bill.

This acquaintance would like me to tell his Congressman that a bill called "The Neutrality Bill" has been sent over to the House for action; that he and many others of the M. C.'s constituency have taken note that during the Senate debate some Senators appeared not to have a clear knowledge of what the bill was about.

He says that some Senators, judging by their speeches, appeared to be under the impression that it was a bill proposing that the United States declare war on Germany; that these constituents desire their Congressman to know that it is positively not that kind of bill; that the bill actually deals with regulations in trade and shipping, designed to maintain our security without our going to war; and that in case he still doesn't understand what the bill is about he may, with equanimity, and at the appropriate time, vote in any way his fancy dictates—but for Pete's sake not to waste time and his own emotional energy by making speeches, copied from Senators' speeches, containing such hackneyed and boring phrases as "I shall never cast my vote to send the pride of our young American manhood to spill its blood on the battlefields of Europe."

The Best Way To Keep Out

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There are, as I see it, two things practically all Americans are for in this war: We want to stay out of it, and we want Hitler stopped. We can, I am convinced, get both of these things by repealing the embargo and enacting cash-and-carry.

The best way for us to keep out of the war is to help the Allies to win it without us. The Allies ought to win the war, first because it is right, and also because that is the best thing for the United States.

This war will decide whether we shall continue to live in peace and security, or whether we must be armed and ready to keep the unbearable Hitler system—tyranny, paganism, persecution, blood-purges, faith-breaking, and conquest by force—out of this hemisphere.

The Nazis have already given unmistakable notice of their desire to dominate certain South American countries.

Allied victory will bring no threat to peace in the Americas. But would it be good for our peace if a despotism whose law is the law of the wolf pack, which hates freedom, despises religion, looks on small nations as mere loot, and keeps no faith should try to extend its military rule to Canada and the French and British colonies in America?

What chance would there be for permanent world peace if Hitler should win? Can world peace be based on raw force? But if the Allies win, there will be a chance, and this time I firmly believe a good chance, for a peace based on justice and the right of each nation to its fair share of natural resources.

You may not like England or France—because of imperialism, past wars, war debts, or whatever. But suppose burglars were breaking into the houses of your friends. And suppose the chief of police had not always led a model life owed you money, and was personally objectionable. Would that make you side with the burglars?

This is a free country. We keep our word. We want to live with and trade with free peoples who keep their word also.

I am just as anxious to keep out of war as any one can be. I do not want my son to go to war. I am for cash-and-carry and repealing the embargo because that is the way to keep our sons and daughters at home.

We are neutral, and we must stay neutral. But it is no more unneutral to repeal the embargo, which will help the Allies, than to maintain the embargo, which is helping Hitler right now.

Other nations across the sea are fighting the things we hate—cruelty, aggression, the ruthless rule of force. The way to stay out of war is to help them win without us, and so prevent the spread of Hitlerism over the earth.

That we should be helping the unspeakable Hitler by maintaining our embargo is almost unthinkable. That we should help him not only against the right but also against our own interest—that is just simply ridiculous.

Like you, I am for America first, last, and all the time. I am for staying out of the war. Cash-and-carry and no embargo is the answer.

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Washington, Oct. 31.

Presto!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Bravo Comrade Saunders! I am glad you took the initiative of informing Comrade Chancey, secretary of the Washington Branch of the Communist Party, a stanch disciple of Herr Stalin, in an effort to assure his following that Owen, Gerber and Goodykoontz, who because they have become disillusioned with the procedure of Herr Stalin, pulled off this "red baiting" stunt by denouncing them as "Trotzkyites."

Formerly it was Social Fascist; Karl Kautsky was a Social Fascist, while Comrade von Ribbentrop at his visits to the Kremlin is considered diplomatish. I no longer even have the heart to refer to it as U. S. S. R., for although not a follower, I had hopes and was waiting and watching for the egg to hatch. Presto! A handkerchief is held over Karl Marx's bust, oola loola palooka; remove the handkerchief, and what do you have? None other than the very devilish Hitler himself. And all this time he was just in disguise. But the mask had to be removed sometime.

I am a member of the Social Democratic Federation of the good old U. S. A. and a secretary of one of its branches in Washington, and though I have hunted and hunted, nary a one do I find to be included in our membership list. Now where could these birds have flown? Can it be, like so many of their predecessors, that they have joined the reactionaries and will soon follow the procedure of others and pop up like Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky.

SARAH MARCUS.

Washington, Oct. 27.

Right Of Self-Defense

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The argument against the repeal of the embargo on shipmen of arms consists chiefly of the fear that it will involve us in war with aggressor nations, and also assumes that war itself is practically never justified, at least in principle.

Our Government was founded on the principle of freedom. If we are to remain loyal to this principle in acts and not in mere words, we must under no circumstances be deterred from applying it in our legislation. The present embargo on arms' shipments seriously compromises this vital principle, and for that reason should be repealed.

With regard to the non-justification of war, there appears to be much confusion of thought. Carried to its logical extreme it would permit would-be criminals, whether individual or national, to carry out their foul intentions without fear of forcible opposition.

There is, however, a very vital distinction between, say, a mere blow on the cheek in a moment of anger, and an assault with intent to kill. In the one case, the turning of the other cheek implies that we should avoid harboring a spirit of revenge or retaliation, and should encourage a spirit of forgiveness. In the other case we are virtually consenting to, if not actually abetting, murder. Should we not exercise the right of self-defense.

ALEXANDER L. TINSLEY,
Baltimore, Md., Oct. 30.

Good Advice

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Well, I see that you've got the "Folded-Arms War" down to a one-column head. Now the next thing to do is restrict the daily reports of the "Folded-Arms-War" to about three or four "sticks" and push it over to an inside page. An admirable position would be right alongside Mary Haworth's column. Any person who aspires to understand the war will need to follow Miss Haworth's favorite advice—namely, "See a psychiatrist!"

Lucullus In Fez

One day in the market outside the Andalous Gate, I found a charming Berber who had a pile of those enormous, succulent snails which the ancient Romans prized so highly. Although the Berbers are a race quite distinct from the Arabs and have a language of their own, Chleuh, most Berbers in the neighborhoods of towns speak Arabic. So, after the usual bestowals of peace upon each other and upon our guardian angels (one at the right hand to note down our good deeds and one at the left hand to note down our bad deeds) I brought out my "How much?"

The charming Berber, with many smiles and rollings of his eyes, made me a long and dramatic speech, whether in Arabic or in Chleuh I knew not. I could catch no familiar word, not even one of the numerals (up to ten), till close to the end I heard the word "hassani." I did not know how many hassani made a franc, or vice versa, so I simply handed him a five-franc note, hoping that I would get enough snails at least to enable me to experiment with cooking them.

The charming Berber appeared delighted beyond all measure. He drew forth a large square of stout brown paper, which he folded into a sort of sack. I held the sack, while he caught the snails and put them into the bag. They were very large, healthy, active snails, and their pursuit and capture had occupied us all during the preliminary transactions, as first one and then another restless snail would try to wander away from the pile.

As the Berber dropped them into the sack, he counted each one aloud in Arabic, and I repeated the number after him. When he got past ten, I began to stumble sadly, but with great patience he corrected and coached me till I could repeat the number after him. He was vastly amused at my efforts and laughed heartily but not at all unkindly at my mistakes.

We reached twenty, then thirty, then forty, and still he kept putting snails into the bag, and still I repeated the numbers after him. Seventy, eighty, ninety, we captured, counted, and put into the sack. Not even at one hundred did he stop. By this time we had become fast friends, for nothing develops a friendship so quickly as the joint pursuit and capture of restless snails, combined with a lesson in counting in Arabic. We stopped at the staggering total of 125 snails, largely, I think, because my makeshift sack was full almost to bursting. I found a length of string in my pocket, and we tied the bag up securely.

Then we squatted on our heels and grinned at each other. My Berber friend clapped his hands to summon the inevitable "cousin," an engaging lad of about 14 with mischievous eyes, and sent him off to the tea-tent for a pot of sweet tea, flavored with fresh mint, which is the universal drink in Morocco. The three of us sipped our tea as noisily as possible, and I smacked my lips and murmured "Beautiful! Very beautiful!" to show my appreciation. The teapot emptied, we had a ceremonious leave-taking. We shook hands; then each one raised his hand to his lips, kissed the back of it, and finally laid it upon his heart, bowing deeply at this last.

When I reached my home in the Ras el Djenane, I put the snails on the kitchen table. Teddy, with whom I was sharing the house, came in about sunset, and I proudly announced that we were going to have snails for dinner. Teddy was immensely pleased and wanted to see the snails at once. I led him to the kitchen, flung open the door and pointed to the table.

"But where are they?" Teddy asked.

"There, in that bag on the table, stupid!" I answered.

Teddy started toward the table, and we heard an ominous crunch as he crossed the floor.

"But they're all over the floor!" Teddy cried.

And they were all over the floor, and all over the walls, and all over the entire kitchen. Desperately we set to work recapturing our dinner, and finally we had 116 snails present and accounted for, three killed in action and six missing.

"It's your day to cook," said Teddy. "Do you know how to cook snails?"

"Of course," I answered; "it's perfectly simple. You make a paste of butter, garlic, salt, pepper and parsley and stop up their shells with the paste. Then you put them in a pan over the fire and cook them in their shells."

"I'll help you," volunteered Teddy. "I'd like to see it done. I'll wash them while you mix the paste."

But it wasn't quite so simple as all that. The snails had no intention of being confined in their shells by any mere paste and stuck their heads out as soon as I had them safely plastered. At last, however, we succeeded in preparing a dozen of the less active ones, and put them on the fire.

"It's horrible," howled Teddy. "I can't stand it."

Neither could I. As soon as the snails began to feel the heat, they came out of their shells with anguished contortions, spilling all the butter and writhing in their own juices. We snatched the pan from the fire and debated other methods of preparing our feast.

Since I have, I am firmly convinced, the instincts of a great cook and since I was very hungry into the bargain, I hit on a moderately humane method. I filled a pot with olive oil, into which I put the garlic, salt, pepper and parsley. When the oil was thoroughly hot, I shut my eyes and dumped a batch of snails into it. When I opened my eyes again, the snails had stopped moving and were simmering away.

We sharpened some twigs from the orange tree in the garden and used them to impale the snails and drag them from their shells. They were very, very delicious—"mooshi mezzian," as I informed Teddy in my best Arabic.

Teddy could eat only 40. As I impaled my sixty-sixth snail and transferred it deftly to my mouth, Teddy complained crossly, "I wish to God you'd learn to count in Arabic. I know I shall be sick."

Importance Of Ships

By Mark Sullivan

War's Major Factor

IN FRAGMENTARY dispatches from Europe are signs of a stage of this war which is just emerging and which in time will be of decisive importance. It has to do with mercantile ships.

At present, all attention is on airplanes. Lay opinion vaguely feels, and technical military opinion expertly believes, that in this opening phase of the war, airplanes are all-important. Though estimates differ, it is commonly believed the Nazis have more planes than Britain and France combined. Fourteen months ago, at the Munich conference, Nazi airplane superiority was overwhelming—it was knowledge of this that made Chamberlain defer to Hitler. Since that time, September, 1938, the Allies have been building feverishly. In addition, they ordered planes from America. Not many of these American planes were delivered before the war began. Since then deliveries have been suspended, until Congress acts on the neutrality bill.

In spite of all the Allies have done or can do for several months, it is believed they will remain for some time inferior in planes. Information from Germany says the Nazis keep some 300,000 men in factories building planes. The quantity of this construction can be estimated by comparison with the United States—the total men engaged in our airplane factories, as of last August, was about 45,000 (though America produces more per man than Germany).

Merchant Fleet Is Decisive Factor

THE FIRST PHASE of the war will probably be determined by whether the Allies can defend themselves against the initial Nazi superiority in planes. If the Allies can stand up for a while, the time will come no doubt when they, by their own manufactures, with or without purchases from America, will equal the Nazis in plane strength.

Regardless of what happens about planes or anything else, if the war goes on, sooner or later merchant ships will become supremely important. To Britain, an island, producing not enough food or goods for its own people, merchant shipping is life or death, victory or defeat.

It is impossible to deal in exact figures, for reports of sinkings by submarines, as given out by the Nazis differ from reports given out by the Allies. The Nazis claim, as of October 25, to have sunk 115 British merchant ships with a total tonnage of 475,321 (in addition to many ships of neutrals). The British admit the sinking of only 51 of their ships, with a total tonnage of 210,021.

3% Of Ships Sunk, Berlin Estimates

THESE FIGURES have meaning only when compared with the total tonnage existing. In 1938 total British merchant tonnage was given by Lloyds as 20,701,000 gross. This, however, includes all ships of over 100 tons. An estimate of Britain's total of ships large enough to carry substantial cargoes is about 2,500 ships with a total tonnage of about 14,000,000.

Assuming that this estimate to be approximately correct, if the Nazi's reports are right, they in eight weeks have sunk about 3 per cent of Britain's mercantile ships. If the British figures are right, the sinking is only about 1½ per cent.

The reader will understand that, to embarrass the British, it is not necessary to sink all their ships, nor a half, nor a quarter. Sinking of even 10 per cent net would be serious. Also, it is not sinkings alone that count against the Allies. Some ships are incapacitated and limp into port to wait for repairs. In wartime all ships move more slowly—when ships go in convoys, the speed of the convoy is the speed of the slowest ship. As an offset, the British are constantly building ships. But they have other need for their man power, and it is doubtful if their new construction equals the Nazi sinkings.

Shipbuilding Boom For U. S. Possible

THE REALLY decisive factors are, first, the quantity of submarines possessed by Germany or available to her. Included in this is the question whether the Nazis will have the help of Russia's submarines. The other decisive factor is the success of the British in defense against submarines, by sinking or by protective measures.

The present rate of sinkings of British ships by German submarines, as claimed by the Germans, is about a quarter of a million tons per month. This rate they will need to increase if they are to embarrass Britain. When, during the Great War, the German sinking reached 536,000 tons in one month (February, 1917), the Allies were seriously alarmed. In a later month (April, 1917) the Germans sunk over a million tons, and our Ambassador in London reported confidentially to President Wilson that the amount of food in the British Isles could not sustain the civil population more than two months. In June, 1917, American Admiral Sims wrote from London: "Ships are being sunk faster than they can be replaced by the shipping facilities of the world; this means simply that the enemy is winning the war . . ." This condition was overcome by, in part, furious building by the United States.

In the present war, without our entering, we can build and sell ships. We can do this under either the existing law or the one now before Congress. As the war goes on, merchant ships will become important not only to belligerents but to the neutral portion of the world.

Latin America And The War

How Culture and Historical Factors Influence Sentiment

By W. L. Schurz.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

THOUGH BENT on neutrality with the same insistence that we are, Latin-American opinion is more divided on the European war. Public opinion is not so well informed on the merits of the conflict, but to the higher rate of illiteracy and the generally lower standard of living, the coverage of newspapers is relatively much smaller. Also, reliable books on the background of the war are much scarcer, and the magazine press does little to enlighten its readers.

For example, there is nothing comparable to our leading news weeklies, no review which has the weight of Foreign Affairs. Moreover, there is lacking such media of public information and discussion as the Foreign Policy Association, the Town Hall of the Air and its local satellites throughout the country, the University of Chicago Round Table, and the Herald Tribune Forum of Current Problems.

On the other nand, Latin-American ears have long been subjected to overseas radio propaganda to an extent and of a violence unknown in the United States. Also, whatever the factual basis, there is probably more informal interchange of opinions in cafes and other public places on the European situation. There are, of course, large numbers of natives whose only knowledge of what goes on in Europe is gained from word of mouth and probably more who have no interest at all in European affairs.

Sentimental About Land Of Origin

A NUMBER of special influences operate to mold opinion in those countries. There are large and influential German colonies in some of the republics, particularly in the southern part of Brazil and Chile. While all their members have a sentimental attachment to their land of origin, they may look on Nazi Germany with different eyes, usually dependent on the distance in time that has elapsed since their acquaintance with the fatherland.

The early-comers of German stock, who have identified themselves with the people among whom they settled, dream in retrospect of another Germany than the upstart and crass Third Reich. The newer generations are liable to be blind and arrogant proselytists of Hitler's blatant Deutschtum. While it would be easy to magnify the possibilities of these communities of German origin as nuclei of Nazi influence, the possibility does exist, particularly in Brazil.

The larger Italian colonies, which in Argentina and the Brazilian state of Sao Paulo form a sizable part of the population, can be expected to give little comfort to the German cause, unless Mussolini throws Italy's force into the war on the side of Germany. The pro-Franco element among the Spanish-born population of Latin America is disposed to be pro-German as against France and England. During the Spanish civil war it had the support of many natives of the conservative classes, but these persons are largely disposed to align themselves on the present European issue according to other considerations.

German Army Much Admired

AMONG ARMY OFFICERS there is much professional admiration of German military efficiency, which has been so strikingly demonstrated in the recent blitzkrieg in Poland. It is a class which, though ordinarily little given to ratiocination, is liable at first glance to find Fascism a congenial state philosophy. This is particularly true of those armies which, like the Argentine and Chilean, have been trained by German military instructors. Also, Germany and Italy have assiduously courted the favor of officers high in the army commands of Latin America by means of junkets to those countries. Much was made of them, and their hosts' military weight was paraded before them at maneuvers and in the barracks.

At the same time, efforts were made to convince them of the superiority of German or Italian planes and other squipment, always with orders from the visitor's government in mind. However, the Fascist powers have not had everything their own way in this respect. The Peruvian and Brazilian armies were trained by French military missions, that to Brazil being headed by no less an expert than Gen. Gamelin. The highly efficient little army of Paraguay learned the business of war at the capable hands of French instructors and put the lessons into practice by roundly defeating the German-trained-and-led army of Bolivia. Gen. Estigarribia, head of the victorious Paraguayan army in the Chaco War, later Minister in Washington and now President of his country, received his military education in France.

IN CASTING ACCOUNTS of sentiment in Latin America, there is no doubt that pro-Ally influences easily outweigh those which favor a German victory. Latin Americans know that England and France harbor no territorial designs against them; they have no such faith in Germany's intentions if she is victorious in the present war. Argentines once had the satisfaction of driving an English army from their soil and Mexicans recall with pride their defeat of the French soldiers of Napoleon III.

But those are old scores that are long since settled and forgotten. Though the German army is a stranger to Latin America, its peoples have little doubt of their ability to repel any armed threat from that quarter. Not only do they believe that they could count on the support of the United States, but they know that every country in South America would rally to the defense of any republic which was attacked from overseas. Masters of their own difficult terrain, intensely patriotic, excellent fighting material, their defensive strength is enough to daunt any aggressor.

Do Not Like Ways Of New Reich

WHATEVER ADMIRATION there may be for its daring and its successes, there is a brutal quality about German imperialism in action that is repugnant to Latin-American sensibilities. Yet, it is a quality which, if the challenge ever came, they could meet with the same ruthlessness that the great Bolivar displayed in his "War to the Death." The Latin Americans do not like the ways of the new Germany. The tactics used at Munich were abhorrent to them, and the lesson of Germany's disregard of the sovereignty and dignity of weaker nations has not been lost on them. They mistrust the callous duplicity of the Nazi government, and resent the heavy-handed courting by its agents as an affront to their own subtlety and perspicacity.

Also, Hitler, regardless of his inner sources of strength, is not of the type of strong man which appeals to the Latin-American imagination. The lack of personal courage that makes him refuse to risk his own life, his ranting, screaming style of oratory, his unimpressive appearance, even his indifference to women, mark him as a dictator to whom they could never raise their "vivas!" Mussolini—earthy, virile, strutting, simpatico on occasion, mujeriego always—is much more to their style.

Another circumstance which cannot be lost sight of in relation to Latin-American attitudes toward the European situation is the fact that Germany is at war with France. For, while the Latin Americans do not warm up to England, however much they may respect some of her institutions, they have a strong spiritual affinity for French civilization. Thousands of influential Latin Americans have traveled and lived in France, have yielded to the charm of her way of life, and speak French as a second language. They are very much interested in the kind of war that Germany will wage against France, and the aerial bombardment of Paris would cost Germany for an indefinite period whatever vestiges of good will it may still have left in Latin America.

Except among especially well-informed groups, Latin-American opinion on the war in Europe has probably taken into little account the political, economic and social factors within Germany and Italy which were responsible for the rise and the rapid triumph of fascism. They may have given even less thought to the conditions within their own countries which might eventually result in a similar regime.

It is conceivable that this might come either as an independent movement or promoted by a victorious Germany through the same insidious process of boring from within—of abetting the forces of division and confusion and discontent to the point of national impotence or disintegration by which she prepares weaker countries for conquest.

Some of the ground is doubtless ready—the tradition of a police-state, which, though a local phenomenon, resorts to some of the familiar techniques of fascism; a rising middle class, gifted beyond its present opportunities and ambitious for a better place in the political and economic sun; precarious national economies, too dependent on the vicissitudes of world demand for their staples; wide and deep-seated social cleavages, with discontents still inarticulate and unorganized or already assertive and championed by definite parties, as in Chile and Peru and Mexico.

Whether these conditions are permitted to become fodder for fascism in Latin America will depend largely on the wisdom with which the republics are governed within the next critical decade or two. Much will depend, too, on the success of the fascist experiment in Europe. If it fails, the Latin-American countries can fall back, for the solution of their problems, on patterns grounded in their own experience and without the model of outlandish ideologies to show them the way.

Navigation Guides Abroad Altered To Confuse Foes

The Navy yesterday warned American shipping that many beacons, buoys, lighthouses and other navigational aids in war areas have been moved or discontinued.

Designed to confuse enemy vessels, the alteration of the sea markings also may lead neutral vessels into danger if evtreme caution is not utilized, officers informally pointed out. The official warning, published by the Hydrographic Office, declared:

"Many of the aids to navigation in the war areas have been changed, moved, or temproraily discontinued. Information concerning these changes is published in the Notice to Mariners whenever received. As it is impracticable to incorporate temporary changes on the charts, mariners are warned to approach navigational aids in the war areas with caution."

3 WPA Workers Send $72.68 to Conscience Fund

Uncle Sam was $72.68 richer today because three relief workers had consciences.

These and other recent contributions by anonymous letter writers swelled the Treasury's famous "conscience fund" to $643,610.51.

A New York WPA worker sent in $63, saying $62.26 of it represented time he was supposed to be on the job but did not work. Sixty cents was money drawn for carfare which was not used, and the remaining 14 cents was thrown in for good measure.

A woman worker at Paducah, Ky., said she could not conscientiously retain $9.54 which she sent to the Treasury.

A Boston worker who sent in 14 cents gave no explanation.

Ham-And-Egg Plan

THE INCOMPETENTS, failures, half-wits and thieves, the ecclesiastical freebooters and body snatchers who rule the emotions of Los Angeles have got something at last in the issue known as ham-and-eggs, which goes to the voters of California on November 7 in the form of an amendment to the State constitution.

This is a proposal to create an absolute dictatorship. It is the most audacious, the most absurd and, at the same time, the most horrifying suggestion ever presented to the voters of any American community since history runneth not to the contrary. Disguised as an old-age pension plan whereby all persons who are rising 50 years and who are, with variations, citizens of California, would receive $30 every Thursday, this incredible fraud is no pension plan at all but an invitation to the voters to elect either of two designated individuals to a position to be known as that of "administrator."

THE PROMOTERS have had the effrontery to name, in a proposed constitutional amendment, two men, one of whom must be selected by the Governor. These two individuals are Roy G. Owens and Will H. Kindig, both of Los Angeles, of whom more will be reported later. It may be said in brief, however, that they are adventurers in emotional politics and neither, by previous achievement, would deserve better than alarm, even though they were running as nominee and alternate for the post of boxing commissioner.

This is the most astonishing proposal ever conceived in this or, for all my knowing on the subject, any other country, not excluding Germany or Russia. After all, Hitler beat his way up and Stalin took over a slaughterhouse which was a going concern. But in California it is proposed that the people deliver the whole life, freedom and property of the State into the hands of either of two individuals who nominated themselves. Huey Long was a prim and modest constitutional statesman by comparison, and let it be understood that is the inconceivable gall of the two nominees and their crowd which has imposed on the confusion and want of Southern California to place this amendment on the ballot.

THE AMENDMENT itself runs up a score of about 1,500 words, and would defy the intelligence of all the sages of all the ages, and yet, to the end, presents an apparent but false promise to pay $30 every Thursday to everyone rising 50. It backtracks, contradicts itself and the American Constitution and gets lost in such fogs as even the most earnest bankers and economists have been unable to penetrate. But it doesn't fail to provide that either Roy G. Owens or Will H. Kindig, of Los Angeles must be named administrator, with power to suppress strikes, forfeit property and money, suspend the debts of favvored individuals, discredit the credit of the State and its counties, cities and towns and spend money at will.

This is not the simple, screwball dream-book proposal which was voted down once before. The $30-every-Thursday lure has been retained only as a lure and is, by agreement even of those who saw some phantom of possibility in the previous plan, a fake. Nevertheless, the C. I. O. element of the labor front has indorsed the fraud, even though the membership and most of the American leaders know it to be a fraud, as an act of gratitude. Ham-and-eggs voted against a reactionary anti-picketing law last time, and the C. I. O. and much of the A. F. of L. element have now given aid and comfort to a plain Nazi, anti-labor movement as a return favor.

THE C. I. O. INFLUENCE was delivered by the Communist leaders dominating the subsidiary C. I. O. units against the will of the rank and file. Many of the rank and file probably will vote against the dictatorship. The Communists with their small but efficient minorities in the C. I. O. locals controlled the sentiment of the majority. The fact that the dictatorship would be union is of no consequence, because chaos, confusion and disaster are their objectives, anyway.

And if ham-and-eggs should win, the Communists of the C. I. O. would expect to move in and help administer the amendment in the expectation of bankruptcy and rioting. They would even be content to let the Nazis run the show, with a little assistance here and there from them, because if ham-and-eggs should win on November 7 California would come under a dictatorship differing only in matters of skill and practice from their own kind. Let it be understood, however, that the Communists of the C. I. O. in California delivered the C. I. O. indorsement to ham-and-eggs.

There will be more along these lines tomorrow.

Today And Tomorrow

The Soviet Fear Of A Post-Hitler Europe

EVER SINCE the conclusion of the Hitler-Stalin pact there have been two main opinions about its meaning: the one that it portends the fusion of the Nazi and Communist revolutions; the other that it marks the revival of Russian imperialism at the expense of pan-Germanism and the restoration of Russia as a great power in the whole region from the Baltic to the Balkans. At one moment the weight of the evidence has seemed to favor the first interpretation, at others it has favored the second.

It seems to me most probable that both views are true, and that Soviet policy is designed to accomplish both ends, that is to say, to frustrate pan-German imperialism now and for the future and at the same time to preserve the Nazi alliance by drawing Hitler more and more towards bolshevism. If this double policy succeeds, Stalin will have protected himself against the attack which Hitler has always threatened, and he will also have made Germany a buffer state, offensively and defensively, between Russia and the rest of Europe.

Soviet Encirclement Of Germany Seen

MR. MOLOTOFF'S speech, if it is read in the light of Soviet acts, give strong support to the theory that the Russian policy is to restrict the German expansion in the east but to promote the ascendency of the revolutionary left wing of Nazism within Germany. The evidence for saying that the Soviets are encircling and restricting the expansion of Germany is to be found in their strategical and military policy from the Baltic to the Balkans. This aspect of the double policy has been dramatized by the enforced return to the Reich of the German settlers within the Russian sphere of influence. The evidence for saying that the Soviets are promoting revolutionary Naziism is to be found in the moral support they give to Hitler against the Allies and in their promises of economic support to enable Hitler to withstand a long siege.

By that support Stalin will make Hitler ever more dependent on Russia for the survival of his regime; and the longer the siege, the more must Hitler turn bolshevist himself and expropriate what remains of the German middle class.

What Mr. Mototoff had to say about Poland is very interesting in this connection. In one paragraph of his speech he boasted that Poland collapsed under "one swift blow . . . first by the German army and then the Red army." Later on he explained that "our troops entered the territory of Poland only after the Polish state had collapsed and actually ceased to exist. Naturally we could not remain neutral toward these facts since as a result of these events we were confronted with urgent problems concerning the security of our state." Thus he wishes it to be understood that Russia helped Hitler to destroy Poland, also that Russia acted only to defend Russian security against Germany after Poland had collapsed.

Allies Were Unwilling To Betray Poland

THIS SEEMING contradiction can be understood by remembering that Mr. Molotoff was negotiating all spring and summer both with the Allies and with the Nazis. What he asked of the Allies as the price of his support in a war against Germany was the right to occupy eastern Poland and the Baltic states. The Allied negotiations broke down because the Allies were too honorable to betray Poland and the neutral Baltic nations to Soviet Russia. The price which the Allies were unwilling to pay, Hitler was willing to pay. That is why he, rather than Mr. Chamberlain and M. Daladier, was able to make an alliance with Stalin.

The price that Russia demanded was essentially the same to both sets of negotiators: namely, Russian military and strategic control of the border states between Germany and Russia. Had the Allies paid the price and been willing to give Russia this security against Germany, Russia would presumably have been willing to complete the blockade by establishing an eastern front; when, as it turned out, Hitler paid the price, the Soviets promised to try to break the blockade in order that the Allies should not be able to restore by their victory the independence of Poland and the Baltic nations. For since these nations are weak, and in their cultural sympathies closer to Germany than to Russia, to restore them would once again permit Germany to expand her influence in the east.

The dominating motive is, however, always the same: fear of the power of Germany. Until Stalin found that he could deal with Hitler, he feared Hitler above all else; since he has made his deal with Hitler, he fears that the war may end with a Germany which will collaborate with western Europe and is capable once more of resisting the Russian and bolshevist advance.

For that reason the increasing Soviet support for Nazi Germany points to the belief in the Kremlin that the Hitler regime is less dangerous to Russia and that in time it will become more favorable to bolshevism than any other German regime which could now replace Hitler's.

Stalin Fears Reich, Not Finland

THE SOVIET DEMANDS on Finland tend to confirm the view that Stalin is now trying to protect himself against Germany in a post-Hitler Europe. He tells us that "the problem of the Soviet Union's security is even more acute inasmuch as Leningrad, which after Moscow is the most important city of the Soviet state is situated at a distance of only 32 kilometers from the Finnish border." When we remember that our very important cities of Detroit and Buffalo are much nearer than that to the Canadian border, and that we have no feeling of insecurity whatever, we may well ask what Russia with her 160,000,000 fears from Finland with her 3,000,000.

Obviously, what Russia fears, in the first instance, is Germany, and not Finland. For Germany is the only great power capable of invading Russia and capturing Leningrad. So if Germany won the war, Stalin would have to look to his defenses, and his demands on Finland are for the purpose of strengthening his defenses. But there is more to it than that. If Hitler loses the war, the new Reich will make a true peace with Great Britain, and that new Reich, if peace, before the German army disintegrates, will be German rather than Nazi, conservative rather than revolutionary. In that event all the nations around the Baltic Sea will have both German and British support, including the support of the British navy, against the danger which they fear more than any other, the westward advance of Russia.

Servile Germany Suits Mr. Molotoff

SO STALIN'S POLICY is to protect himself against Germany and the western Allies by the double device of occupying strategical points and by giving some help to an increasingly subservient Hitler. What he dreads now is not Hitler but post-Hitler Germany and a victory of the Allies. Such an outcome will restore in some form or other the independence of all the non-Russian people from Scandinavia to the Mediterranean, and above all it will make Germany once more a great western power, able to exercise again that rightful and necessary influence in the east which Hitler's stupendous blunder has for the time being destroyed.

Mr. Molotoff said in his speech that "a strong Germany is an indispensable condition for durable peace in Europe." That is true. But the fact is that behind the imposing facade, Hitler's Germany is a lamentably weak Germany. It is encircled by nations that dislike and distrust it. It has no ally and no friend. It has had to renounce the protection of Germans in great regions of Europe. It has had to make itself dependent on Soviet Russia. It has had to give ground everywhere in the Baltic, in Poland, in the Danube valley, in the Balkans, in the Mediterranean.

Such a Germany may suit Mr. Molotoff. But it suits him not because it is strong but because it is weak and because it has to be servile.

The Once Over

Fair's End

New York's Worlds Fair is over,
And 'til another year,
The winter gets the trylon
And takes the perisphere.

The Aquacade is empty—
Each bathing girl has flown,
Where she may, if she wishes,
Get in a tub alone.

The midway is deserted,
The barkers all are through,
Gone is each little wriggle—
No dove awaits its cue.

No girls go nearly nudist
In veilings not quite nice
And all those "frozen Beauties"
Are through with sideshow ice.

The artificial lightning
Has heard the news, "You're through!"
And all the man-made thunder
Has had its notice, too.

Nobody phones cross-country
While thousands stand and stare;
To try and find a phone booth
Now fills you with despair.

The restaurants look ghastly
As here and there a mouse
Chirps, "What the deuce has happened?
There's no food in the house!"

The big bizarre pavilions,
Once very much alive,
And costing many millions
Now look like "two for five."

The monkeys seem befuddled
As privacy now cloaks
Their antics, and they chatter,
"Say, where are all the folks?"

Those vintage locomotives
Abandoned on the tracks
Say to the streamlined Pullmans;
"Kid, now you can relax."

The G. M. Futurama
Now sees no rush pell-mell
Of folks who'll wait an hour—
To get a dizzy spell!

There are no bands, no laughter,
No dances, fetes or brawls . . .
I guess they've put the World's Fair
Away in camphor balls.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl's Life Is Seemingly Full and Happy, But All Her Romances End on Sour Note; Why Is This?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: What is wrong with a woman who has reached the age of 28, who lives a well-rounded life, participating in sports and clubs, has a host of friends, is at present studying music, and feels that 24 hours a day are not enough for all the activities in which she wishes to participate—and yet finds herself miserable and unhappy? You would naturally think that any such person, who has managed to map out for herself such a full life, would be able to figure out her problems pertaining to love and marriage. However, I seem to be continually in hot water about such things.

I have known many men on friendly terms, and later either they have become interested and I don't, or I become seriously interested and they don't, and then the friendship ends. Once again I am faced with such a problem and I feel that unless I take stock of myself and decide on some course of action, I will eventually be left "on the shelf."

My immediate problem is this: I have been seeing a certain man on an average of four nights a week for the past four months. He is in his thirties, has a background similar to mine and was married and divorced in his early twenties. He is financially established and could easily support a wife. Several weeks ago, a friend of mine from out of town stayed a week with me and she took it upon herself to talk to him, telling him that another man was seriously interested in me (which is true; although I don't reciprocate his interest) and wanted to marry me, and if he weren't serious, to say so and stop making me unhappy.

Later I learned of this and tried to straighten things out by telling him that she had spoken to him without my knowledge or consent. While we were discussing the matter he told me that he had never felt guilty about taking me out because he knew I was popular and had other invitations. I asked him if he didn't know that even a popular girl could prefer one man to all the others, and that she, too, had a heart that could be broken.

He said he had never thought of me, matrimonially, and that he had decided now to stay away from me until he heard of my engagement or marriage. He said if an engagement did not materialize, he would come back, as he did feel "that spark" for me. When I asked him why he didn't give it a chance to grow, instead of killing the feeling, he countered by asking if it would make any difference to me if he were interested in marriage. That remark puzzled me, but I didn't ask him to explain.

Incidentally, he mentions spending a week-end together, but never forces the issue, and I try looking at his suggestions as a "modern" would, without getting insulted. He also asked me if and when I was taking a cruise, and would I mind if he took the same trip; but then he added that he thought his presence would "cramp my style."

I am so confused in my own mind that I am afraid I cannot appraise him fairly. I have thought of not seeing him for a month . . . I am still quite young and attractive and men seem to get a keen delight in rushing me and ending it when I become interested; all of which leaves me miserable for months afterward. I sometimes feel that none of the men I know are really the cause of my unhappiness; but that it comes of inner conflict. What should I do? Sincerely, L. B. C.

Emotion Triumphs Over Reason

DEAR L. B. C.: What you need, above all else, is a steadfast "interior way of life," based on a spiritual philosophy, an ethical code and moral objectives, which will give your social existence some pattern and purpose that exists more or less independently of the men who come and go, playing their several tunes upon your heartstrings.

It is probable that much of your perennial difficulty with men has to do with letting emotionalism run a fairly unbridled course, in each new sentimental alliance that is formed. This would be because (a) you have no well defined philosophy or code of ethics which rejects such laxity; and (b) because, in the very desperation of your desire to introduce some meaning into your existence, you submit to being led around by the nose, so to speak, by each and every man who seems to give promise of assuming governorship of your life.

There is unconscious pathos in your statement that, when your current beau "suggests spending a week-end together, (you) try looking at his suggestion as a 'modern would, without getting insulted!" That implies not only a deplorable excess of craven anxiety to please, but also a lamentable lack of constructive standards and values by which to order your life. As a matter of fact, a verbal "slap down" of such a suggestion probably would send your stock skyrocketing in the man's mind.

In the better course of action which you would plot for the future, I suggest that you be more concerned with the development of character (i. e., moral vigor or firmness, especially as acquired through self discipline), and less with spinelessly expedient efforts to find favor in the eyes of a miscellaneous assortment of admirers, all of whom are probably living in a spiritual chaos as bewildering as your own has been.

Once you have begun to "find yourself" (as the phrase goes), through discerning, declaring and faithfully living by those standards which your intuition tells you are best, then you will begin involuntarily to attract unto yourself persons of comparable and complementary mental and spiritual caliber. And until you do, you will be constantly pulled off your course by every predatory or persuasive male who fancies you as a transient partner-in-diversion.

The wisdom of quiet self-contained, as opposed to hysterical striving for social popularity, is beautifully told in John Burroughs' famous poem, titled "Waiting," which says, in part:

Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, nor tide, nor sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray
Nor change the tide of destiny.

The law of love binds every heart
And knits it to its utmost kin,
Nor can our lives, flow long apart
From souls our secret souls would win.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal waves come to the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high
Can keep my own away from me.

Flash of Jewels on Accessories

Jewels shine on accessories this season to keep pace with the mood for romantic, lush fashions. It was only fitting that Evans, an outstanding designer of well-turned bags and compacts, should create a handbag to fit in with this tempo. Giant-sized rhinestone fruits in precious jewel colors surrounded by transparent green enamel leaves ornament the new evening bag pictured above. It is of black antelope, framed in satiny gold metal, and is lined in satin and topped with a cluster of pears—almost good enough to eat. Aside from the neat contents of mirror, large change purse and metal-edged comb, there is a black enamel vanity case, lipstick and cigarette case, also overflowing with jeweled fruits

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Reducers Should Take Care That Pounds Are Lost in the Right Places; Proportions Should Be Checked on By Measurements

YOU may have had a beautiful figure 30 pounds or so ago. And you may think that if you could just trim that excess off, you would be your "old sylph" again. But it isn't necessarily so!

For a bad example, we'll say that you are a size 40 with a 36-inch waist. All right, suppose you go ahead and lose your 30 pounds. And in the process you lose four inches off the bust and three off the waist. You're slimmer, but your figure is worse!

In that case you should plan to trim at least six inches off the waistline—not three. And the only possible way of doing that is to exercise consistently to make the waist muscles so strong that they hold your midriff in, firm and slim.

How to Reduce Bust

You can always count on losing excess inches through the bust when you reduce your weight. But even for this measurement exercise is essential. Unless the muscles are toned and shortened along with the weight loss the result will be a sagging of the tissues. You don't want that to happen!

Here is an exercise that uses the muscles of the bust and waist:

Stand on the knees on the floor. Have the knees several inches apart, and hold the arms out at the sides, shoulder-level. Swing backward and touch the left hand to the right heel, return to the starting position, and swing to the other side. Be sure that you keep the hips tucked under.

For a hipline that has wandered from symmetry, rolling is an effective and not too strenuous slimming measure. It is particularly helpful in smoothing fat pads on the sides of the hips. Try this one: Lie on the back, hold the legs together and straight, with the feet slightly off the floor. Place the hands out at the sides, elbows slightly bent, and roll from left to right and back, going away over on the sides of the hips and thighs. This exercise also tends to strengthen the tummy muscles.

Take Your Choice

You can take your choice as to the type of exercise you do for each measurement. To make your program give you a lovely figure you should concentrate more or less on the set you particularly need, without neglecting general exercise for all the measurements. What you want is not just less weight—you want a beautifully proportioned figure with no wayward lumps or bulges. That takes exercise.

Children Sightseers Like Zoo Best

They Never Tire of Watching Animals, Escort Aide Says

SMALL CHILDREN are intrepid sight-seers. Long after the grown ups complain of disinterest or aching feet, the tots show no inclination to return home. There's always one more thing they want to see. This is the experience of Miss Pauline Mittell, staff member of the recently organized Children's Escort Service here.

Both local and out-of-town children, 3 to 15 years of age, give the Zoo as their first choice of interesting places to visit. Second preference is the finger-printing department of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Next come the movies and the theater.

Not Afraid of Lions

"Neither the fierce mien nor deafening roar of the lions at the Zoo hold any terrors for the youngsters," said Miss Mittell. "In fact, they crowd as close to the iron cage as possible. Especially the boys stand around fascinated with the movements of the animals. Of all the fowls or beasts, they prefer the lions."

Girls, however, she observed, prefer watching the milder antics of the monkeys and bears. Their chief amusement comes from feeding the monkeys or waiving to the large polar bears that stand on two feet and return their greetings.

To prevent excessive fatigue the member of the Escort Service who takes the child sight-seeing limits the public buildings to one a day. This scouting around is interspersed with luncheon at one of the cafeterias or a picnic spread. The picnic seems to bring more fun and the children will carry a picnic basket with great zeal in anticipation of the feast, according to Miss Mittell.

Lose Their Shyness

"Sight-seeing in a group," said Miss Mittell, "takes away the shyness from timid children. In sharing an experience with someone their own age they learn to make friends more easily. And the few who are overbearing and selfish soon learn the give-and-take spirit. Should one become stubborn, we soon find something to distract his or her attention.

"Many children are unhappy because the people with whom they associate do not radiate happiness. When this is the case children fail to enjoy any amusement. Therefore we try to keep a joyful appearance, answer their questions patiently so that they will understand the answers and be stimulated so that they will seek further information."

In addition to the sight-seeing trips, the Escort Service, which is composed of a small staff of college-trained women, takes the children to the doctor, dentist, hiking, swimimng or even to the trains. For those who are not interested in gadding about they offer singing, dancing, crocheting, knitting, painting and cake decoration.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Women in Books

The girl who is always grabbing off her hat as she comes in the door and whose tousled hair (without the aid of pocket comb or a session at the mirror) falls engagingly about her face.

The woman who never sits in a chair but drops cozily to the floor (regardless of what she is wearing) or curls up before the fireplace locking her hands about her knees and looking dreamily into the flames.

The langorous siren who saw in her early youth the picture of Madame Recamier reclining on a divan and who has since assumed that all lounges, sofas, daybeds, cots, et cetera, have only one purpose.

The mysterious beauty with the sphinx-like countenance who stays sullenly aloof from the chattering crowd and who winds up at the end of the evening with all the interesting men at her side.

The friendly, wholesome, good pal who is usually o the golf links playing with three men in a foursome and who at parties is always in the side room with the men guests taking another Scotch and soda and being misunderstood by "stuffy" wives.

The pure woman who breaks minor conventionalities and is misunderstood by everyone except the male hero.

The not so pure woman who breaks major conventionalities and who is misunderstood by everyone except the male hero.

The lost woman with a noble soul who is regenerated through the uplifting influence of the male hero.

The beautiful society deb who becomes the ingenue reporter in a newspaper city room and who gets the big story and also the big editor or publisher.

The brave little widow with numerous progeny who goes out into the world with no business training and in a few years becomes a feminine business tycoon and runs for Congress.

The wife whose "zest for living" gets her into numerous misadventures and who is always taken back by the patient, understanding husband.

The long-suffering and understanding feminine doormat who always takes back her charming but characterless husband.

The woman who is so exquisitely beautiful that onlookers are moved to gasps, even to tears.

The woman whom male novelists describe through 500 pages as being utterly charming and devastating and who never does or says anything to prove it.

A Woman's New York

Manhattan Points With Pride to Susan Haywood, Of Flatbush, Who Made Good in Hollywood

New York, Nov. 1.

THERE are a lot of pretty girls in this town, which is only natural, for the great mass of newcomers in the days of unrestricted immigration just settled down in the shadow of the East River Bridges and to this day don't know anything about the United States. Thus it is a city of polygot beauties, and many of them are superb.

Alice Hughes

But I have always been comfoozled on account of the relatively small number of movie dolls we ship to Hollywood. Our most famous product was Clara Bow, the Brooklyn red-head, Sylvia Sidney (the new mamma of a little boy) came from the Bronx, and Sigrid Gurie was a Brooklyn product via Norway. There may be a few more, but I don't just recollect them. But now we have another in Susan Hayward from Flatbush, who has been seen in "Beau Geste" and "Our Leading Citizen," and is now chumming with old pals here after a long personal appearance tour.

Susie is a cute girl, and was Edythe Marrener when modeling in these parts. Brooklyn though she is, she now talks very Park avenue. At present she is very put out with the model agent, Mr. Walter Thornton, who is suing her for breach of contract to the loud tune of $100,000. Susie says he didn't get her in pictures at all, and anyway, she hasn't that much money, so why sue?

La Hayward was one of the 165,009 girls who was tested for Scarlett in "Gone With the Wind." Though she failed to make the varsity, she did get a movie break, and will do all right. "I think Mr. Thornton is a nasty man," says Susie. "Trying to get publicity at my expense." Then she talks gayly of her days at Public School 181, and Girl's Commercial High. She cheered me up plenty. I had thought that Texas furnished every model and movie gal now practicing.

Mayor LaGuardia is always meetin' his old school teachers. The other day he turned up at Mrs. Alma Pratt's business school. She taught him stenography 33 years ago, and he learned the trick in the record time of 33 years. Mrs. Pratt gave him a fancy testimonial, and Spike said he had had fine secretary for 14 years. Then he married her, and got a poor cook. Mrs. LaGuardia wasn't present but I bet hizzoner got a good going over when the missus saw the newspapers!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The handsome and very nice young Britisher, David Niven, recently passed through on his way home where he hopes to rejoin his regiment, the Highland Light Infantry. What a shame! Mars, keep your red hands off our dream men! But, there is hope! Maybe England will send him back to propagandize through our silver screen, just as wise France has turned loose the top dream boy, Charles Boyer, to come back to our country to load us again with his Gallic charm. Those old countries' brains aren't quite ossified, yet . . .

Californians Make Merry at Luncheon

Mrs. Henry F. Grady and Mrs. Carroll Stewart Are Hostesses at Function Held At Women's National Democratic Club

By Hope Ridings Miller,

CALIFORNIA SUNSHINE was brought to Washington in more ways than one yesterday when Mrs. Henry F. Grady, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, and Mrs. Carroll Stewart, both of whom hail from the Golden State, entertained at luncheon at he Woman's Naional Democratic Club headquarters on New Hampshire avenue.

Guest of honor was another Californian, Mrs. Mattison Boyd Jones, of Glendale, who, with her husband, recently arrived for a brief stay at the Mayflower. Further drawing from California for their guest list, the two hostesses invited Mrs. Sheridan Downey, wife of the California Senator, and Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, whose husband formerly was Senator.

But wait—I'm not through telling you about the distinguished West Coasters on hand for the party. Mrs. John C. Macfarland (the former Eleanor Hancock Banning) also was there, coming in from Fort Myer, where she has been the guest of her cousin, Col. George S. Patton, jr., and Mrs. Patton. Mrs. Macfarland will leave today for Madison, Wis., where she will visit briefly before returning to her home in South Pasadena, Calif. Other social dates on her calendar yesterday was a dinner given last evening by Col. and Mrs. Patton at Fort Myer.

Mrs. Harold Bryant Among the Guests

Mrs. Grady, wearing a trim pea green wool frock with a black plumed hat, accented her luncheon costume with gold costume jewelry. Mrs. Stewart wore a shoulder corsage of rose buds with her black frock and beret effect hat. As one well-dressed Californian after another arrived (Mrs. Downey's dark green ensemble was most becoming; and Mrs. McAdoo's crushed raspberry frock with a matching hat made me wish I had seen them first), I was beginning to think I was the only person present who was not from California when in came a fellow-Texan, Miss Minnie Mae Fleming. Looking, as usual, as if she had stepped out of a fashion page, she had on a tailored black frock, trimmed in green and worn with a tall-crowned black hat.

Soon thereafter I spotted a number of other non-Californians among the guests. Mrs. Harold Bryant, who is visiting here for a few days from Grand Canyon, Arizona, was a popular guest. She came East to bid good-bye to her son, Herwil Bryant, who will leave with the Byrd expedition on Sunday.

Late-Comers Enliven Party

Delightfully informal from first to last, the luncheon got under way without protocol rearing its stiff head. Guests were seated, not according to rank, but by numbers they drew while the company assembled.

All members of the party had not arrived when the luncheon began; so over the fruit cocktail, we greeted Mrs. McAdoo (she had gone to the Grady apartment, thinking the luncheon would be there); over the chicken salad, we paused a few seconds to wave to Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, and Mrs. Florence Kerr who were latecomers; over the lime ice, we heard Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross explain why she simply couldn't be there a minute sooner (it was all budget business); and over the coffee we hailed Mrs. May Thompson Evans, who put in an apologetic appearance at that time.

Others there (and in their places on time were Mrs. Emily Newell Blair; Mrs. J. Frederick Essary, whose dark green snatch of a hat with a huge fuchsia rose on front is one of the snappiest lids I have seen this season; Mrs. Irene B. Caldwell, Mrs. George W. Ewell, Mrs. Walter P. Keene, Mrs. Dorothy Harper, Mrs. Alva Brewer and Mrs. Jewell W. Swofford.

Patricia Prochnik Gives First of Luncheon Series

Miss Patricia Prochnik, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Prochnik, entertained yesterday at the first in a series of luncheons she is planning to give during the winter instead of one large coming-out party. The luncheon, which was served buffet style, was held at the Prochnik home on Twenty-fourth street.

The guests, most of whom are debutantes of the season, were the Misses Edith Wright, Patricia Hurley, Yolanda Alfaro, Achsah Dorsey, Mae Simpson, Edith Pearson, Margaret Gordon, Joan McKenna, Nancy Davis, Molly Stonestreet, Billie Byrd West, Virginia Pennington and Louise Moore of Winchester, Va.

Brazilian Ambassador and Senora de Martins Entertain Countrymen With Dinner Here

THOUGH DIPLOMATIC SOCIETY has more or less gone into crepe, many interesting visitors from foreign lands are, or have been, in Washington these days. Among those here on business this week are several prominent Brazilians, two of whom were guests at a dinner last evening given by the Brazilian Ambassador and clever Senora de Martins.

Among their guests were Alencastro Guimaraes, Brazilian Undersecretary of Communications. He has just purchased here 14 ships for the Brazilian Merchant Marine. Great friends of the Ambassador, who frequently visit the Capital and who were present at the dinner last night, are M. and Mme. Friele, of New York. M. Friele is head of an importing firm. His wife is one of the most charming women ever to visit the Capital.

MME. MARTINS is a South American who "does things," one of her accomplishments being in the field of sculpture. In the library downstairs are several busts she has done, and she has a studio in the embassy attic, where she climbs every day for serious work. Last evening at the dinner she wore a printed chiffon frock, with a full skirt, a diamond clip at the neckline, and gardenias in her dark hair. The table was decorated with yellow chrysanthemums and autumn leaves.

Among the guests was Mme. Marianna Brull, wife of a Cuban diplomat. She and her husband were stationed in Brussels when Ambassador Martins represented his country there. They were on vacation here when the war broke out, and instead of returning to Belgium, Senor Brull went to the foreign office in Havana. His wife is spending several days in Washington with Mrs. George Maurice Morris.

A LETTER to a friend here from Nobildonna Betty Capomazza, formerly Betty Hardie, says that they are getting along quite well in Rome despite no coffee or gas for their car. As Betty was famous for consuming quarts of coffee every day, her friends here have been hoping life wasn't proving unendurable. She and her husband, formerly Secretary of the Italian embassy, have taken an old Roman apartment with marble floors, and are busy furnishing it.

THOUGH SOPHIE TUCKER and Victor Moore seem to have their minds well on their work at performances of "Leave It to Me," they remarked at luncheon the other day that they loved playing in Washington as it was such fun to pick out the celebrities in the audience over the footlights. Among the "newsreel faces" there on Tuesday night they spotted the British envoy, Lord Lothian, who was not amused at the crack of the actor who plays the British Ambassador to Moscow: "Britain will issue a statement tomorrow when we see which way the wind is blowing."

With Lord Lothian were his counselor, Victor Malletl, and the Anthony Rumbolds. Mrs. Rumbold wearing a long evening coat of scarlet wool which neatly matched her lipstick. Others present were pretty Edith Wright, who had on a black velvet dinner dress with white ruching trimming the square neckline; Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Cumming, jr., Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, and Mrs. Edwin Watson, who went to the play two nights in succession.

A LOCAL society editor who is vague about all colors except the primary ones, got tired of writing up dresses as just red, white, blue, etc. So she went to a downtown department store and got herself a color chart they use for furniture. Now she is blithely using all sorts of wonderful adjectives for the shades of guests' frocks, one of her favorites being "reindeer," which fascinates her.

Pan-American Union Names 2 Latin Women

Senora De Martinez Guerrero Appointed Chairman of Commission, With Senorita Bernadino Vice Chairman

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

The Post Club Editor.

The governing board of the Pan American Union, by unanimouse vote, yesterday afternoon appointed Senora Ana Rosa de Martinez Guerrero, of Argentina, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women. Senorita Minerva Bernadino, of the Dominican Republic, who has been associated with the work of the commission for the past four years at the headquarters here, was named vice chairman.

The appointments were made by the Pan American Union in accordance with the provisions of a resolution adopted at the Eighth International Conference of American States, authorizing it to designate the chairman from among representatives of the commission, appointed by the respective governments. The appointment of Sapnish-speaking women to the chairmanship and vice chairmanship is in accordance with the desire of the 18 Spanish-speaking countries among the 21 represented in the commission.

Senora de Martinez Guerrero, prominent feminist leader in her country, succeeds Miss Doris Stevens, who was appointed one of seven first members of the commission and its chairman at the time it was formed during the Sixth International Conference of American States in Havana, in 1928.

Status Still Not Settled

Although the action of the Pan American Union settles the chairmanship of the body, it does not close the controversy as to the status of Miss Stevens and that of Miss Mary Winslow, appointed by President Roosevelt as this country's representative last spring. The appointment of Miss Winslow was made on the basis of the resolution of the Lima Conference, "that governments which as yet have not appointed their representatives—or whose representatives are not active, appoint such representatives as soon as possible."

Although Miss Winslow's name is included by the Pan American Union among those of the representatives of 19 countries whose governments have made their appointments to the commission, those who support Miss Stevens claim there was no vacancy when Miss Winslow was appointed.

Choices Hailed By Miss Winslow

Miss Emma Wold, counselor for the Inter-American Commission for the past three years, called attention to Joint Resolution 183, now before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, which is intended to clarify the status of the United States' representative. Under the resolution's interpretation the board of the Pan American Union has sole authority to remove Miss Stevens.

"Miss Stevens was appointed by the governing board of the Pan American Union, with the Secretary of State, Frank B. Kellogg, sitting as chairman," said Miss Wold. She served for ten years without pay and raised money for the commission's work. The question is whether the executive of one country can ignore the action taken by the board of the Pan American Union, including all 21 countries. The Lima resolution called for the filling of vacancies and not for reorganization of the board."

Miss Winslow, whose only comment as to the controversy was that "the matter was settled last spring," said of the appointment of Senora de Martinez Guerrero and Senorita Bernardino "it is a fine combination and I shall be delighted to work with them.

Senorita Bernardino expects that Senora de Martinez Guerrero will spend part of her time here but, in her absence, the work of the office of the commission will be carried on under Senorita Bernardino's direction. She is one of the leading women of the Dominican Republic, has held important posts, including those of chief of statistics of the Department of Education and Inspector of Public Instruction. She is also on the staff of Ateneo Dominicano and other cultural and femmist associations in her country.

Great impetus has been given to the progress of women in South and Central America by the work of the Inter-American Commission, she says. She has traveled in 14 South American countries, studying women's problems. She was associated with Senora de Martinez Guerrero during the Lima conference, where they became close friends.

She also expressed admiration for Miss Stevens and declared her work as chairman of the commission had been "brilliant and of great value."

Columbia Heights Art Club Also Finds Finnish Names Hard to Pronounce

MEMBERS of the Columbia Heights Art Club have keen sympathy nowadays for the news commentators on the radio—they are learning to pronounce the names of people and places in Finland.

In the early spring, when the club decided to continue its study of Scandinavian countries this season, going from Sweden to Denmark and Finland, someone raised the question as to whether or not Finland would be interesting as a study subject.

Events which have transpired since, bringing Finland to the front pages, have injected timeliness into the club programs and dispelled all doubt as to availability of spot news for papers.

The club meets today at the home of Mrs. Joseph R. McCuen, 501 East Leland street, with Mrs. A. B. McManus as assistant hostess and Mrs. Elmer Frazier program chairman. Mrs. John E. Briggs will preside in the absence of the president, Mrs. Robert C. Hibben, who is on a trip to the West Coast with her husband.

ALTRUSA REPRESENTED—Two prominent members of the Altrusa Club will participate in the program of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations November 10 and 11 at the Mayflower Hotel. Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, of New London, Conn., who is managing director of the research headquarters of the institute at Connecticut College for Women, is a past international president of Altrusa, and Miss Bess Goodykoontz, of the office of education, who is scheduled to speak, is an active member of the local club.

HEADQUARTERS NEWS—Marion E. Martin, vice chairman of the Republican National Committee, in charge of women's activities, will be the guest of Mrs. Edward E. Gann at the opening luncheon of the season of the League of Republican Women today in the clubhouse, 1301 Seventeenth street, and will talk briefly afterward. Mrs. Virginia White Speel, founder and first president of the league, also will attend and will have as her guest Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel, president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, of which Mrs. Speel also is a former president.

OLD FRIENDS — Frances Youngblood, who headed the group of Alabamans at the train to meet the former U. S. Minister to Albania, Dr. Hugh Grant, Mrs. Grant and Louise, when they arrived in Washington Tuesday night, was probably the most interested in the account of their experiences in Tirana. Summer before last she visited them at the legation and has followed all the news of events there with keenest interest since.

She and Dr. Grant were members of the staff of the Birmingham News at the same time many years ago.

HOME FOLKS—It will seem like old times to many members of the Woman's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches to have Mrs. Eugene Pugh, former president, present tomorrow morning at the administrative meeting.

After the session, Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, who is now president, and members who served as officers under Mrs. Pugh, will entertain for her at luncheon at the federation headquarters, 1749 N street. Mrs. Pugh is here from Los Angeles on a visit.

Dinner Opens Campaign for Goucher Funds

$360,000 Is Sought For Residence Hall On Towson Campus

Washington Alumnae of Goucher College last night gave a dinner launching their part of the institution's campaign to raise $360,000 for a residence hall on its new campus in Towson, Md.. Dr. David Allen Robertson, the college president, and Dr. Katherine Jeanne Gallagher, head of the history department were guests of honor at the dinner, held at the A. A. U. W. clubhouse, with more than 100 attending.

Dr. Gallagher, who discussed "American Education During the World Crisis," asserted that while Europe is looked in war, the United States has a paramount obligation to maintain its emphasis upon the education of American youth.

"Nowhere in the world outside of our western continents does there exist even the relative tranquility which is the necessary background for true intellectual development," Dr. Gallagher said. "To improve education should be among the contributions of the United States."

President Robertson, speaking on "The Goucher Way of Education," said the trustees intend to build promptly on the suburban campus. The size of the residence hall will depend upon the amount raised.

Goucher has had a 421-acre tract in suburban Baltimore awaiting building since 1921. Meanwhile, lacking funds, the College has continued in its half-century-old buildings in a central part of Baltimore.

This fall Miss Mary V. Robinson of Washington, Mrs. Willard L. Momsen of New York, Baroness Leopold W. von Seldeneck of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Louis I. Wilcox and Mrs. Robert B. Wagner, of Baltimore, have organized a Nation-wide campaign among Goucher alumnae to raise $360,000 to construct a residence hall as the first structure to rise on the building-less campus.

Third P.-T. A. Institute Opens With Nearly 200 Registered

With a registration of 160 for the morning session and a much larger attendance in the evening, the third annual Parent-Teacher Institute at George Washington University opened yesterday under the joint auspices of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers and the university. Mrs. Clifton D. Lowe, president of the congress, presided.

Dean Elmer L. Kayser, professor of European History, addressing last night's session on "The European Situation," declared:

"America today confronts a European war and is bewildered. She is bewildered because her activity in the face of war must be the resultant of two deeply engraved forces: the one operating as a static force, the other dynamic.

"The conception of America as the land of the free and the home of the brave—a home for the oppressed af all nations—a helping hand to any in need—drives America into idealism. It encourages America to believe in optimism.

"But there is a static force. She does not want again to see her idealism dragged to the ground or to experience again that sense of frustration. That acts as a static force.

"What would this seem to indicate for the immediate future? It must make America hesitate as long as the issues of war are uncertain and confused, lest America again be precipitated into a peace which is likewise uncertain and confused.

"The great crusade which America must fight will be the crusade which comes after the the war, when all that America has will hardly be enough to insure that the peace will meet those objectives which American idealism has set up and end that sense of frustration which America has too often experienced in its foreign affairs."

The ideal father and mother were described by a college student for parent-teacher workers at the morning session.

Members of Prof. Mitchell Dreese's class in child psychology at the university attended and participated in the discussion. One of the students, responding to a query from the parent-teacher delegates, depicted her mother and father as the ideal parents from the young person's point of view, disavowing any "desire to boast about my parents. They never quarrel—that I know of." "Of course my sister and I fuss sometimes—mostly over clothes—as girls will, but our parents always smooth things over. We have a close family circle that is our own, where we feel that we are understood and appreciated."

Today there will be morning and afternoon sessions and a luncheon at 1:30.

Mrs. Dimock Leaves G.W.U. $200,000

Sum to Be Used to Establish Memorial to Her Daughter, Susan

Mrs. Susan Whitney Dimock left her $200,000 estate to George Washington University to establish a memorial to her daughter, Susan, the wife of Giuseppe Catalivi, former counselor of the Italian Embassy.

Mrs. Dimock's will was filed for probate in the District Court yesterday. She died September 12 at her summer home in Bar Harbor, Me. Mrs. Dimock had lived in Washington since 1913. Her brother, William C. Whitney, was Secretary of the Navy in the Cabinet of President Grover Cleveland.

The university was requested to preserve Mrs. Dimrock's fine china porcelain and antique furniture as a separate collection. These articles, she directed, are to be given to the George Washington Memorial, "if and when erected."

Mrs. Dimock was for several years president of the George Washington Memorial Association and worked to induce Congress to purchase a site at Seventh street and Constitution avenue. After a campaign to raise $5,000,000 for the memorial by public contribution was abandoned, the site was sold for the National Art Gallery now under construction.

Dies Inquiry Seeks 2-Year Extension

lidity of the N. M. U. charge. I believe it's my duty to see that our witnesses are protected."

McCuistion, former Communist and expelled member of the National Maritime Union, reiterated his allegations of N. M. U. intimidation in a complaint made yesterday to the civil liberties section of the Justice Department. (McCuistion was arrested Tuesday by Metropolitan police at the request of New Orleans authorities, in connection with the killing of Philip Carey, N. M. U. official, September 17.)

Testimony Studied

Accompanied by Lieut. Horace Lineberg and Detective Sergeant Guy Rone, McCuistion appeared at the Justice Department at special request of the Dies Committee. The witness was interviewed by Heny A. Schweinhaut, chief of the civil liberties section, whom Dies has accused of attempting to "discredit" McCuistion's testimony, and by James M. McInerny, special assistant to the Attorney General.

Justice Department officials said McCuistion declared he didn't know whether the arrest was part of the alleged N. M. U. conspiracy to intimidate him. His complaint centered, the officials said, on charges of harrassment and assault by N. M. U. officers in the last year and a half. McCuistion's testimony will be "carefully studied" for evidence of possible violation of Federal laws by members of the N. M. U. or others, the Justice Department said.

A dramatic twist was given the Dies committee hearing yesterday morning when McCuistion's mother, Mrs. D. M. Crawford, of Frederick, Md., took the stand.

"Hoped to Take Over Government"

Mrs. Crawford, a frail woman of 55, testified that Joseph Curran, N. M. U. president, had told her that Communists "were placing so many people in key posts in Washington that they hoped to take over the Government in a few years."

"He said they thought they would be able to take charge overnight," Mrs. Crawford asserted. She said Curran had visited her home in Frederick in the winter of 1937, and had given her to understand he was a member of the Communist Party.

Curran flatly denied before the committee last week that he was a Communist.

"He was very enthusiastic about the party's ideology," she said, "and very proud of the fact he was a member."

Mrs. Crawford said Curran told her the Communists were "already powerful enough to stop every ship from sailing if they wanted to." She also quoted the N. M. U. leader as saying the party had "bored from within" the railroads.

Calls Charge a "Frame-Up"

Asserting that the murder charge against her son was a "frame-up," Mrs. Crawfrod added with vehemance, "If he goes to jail on a framed charge or if he goes to the electric chair, I'd a darn sight rather he'd go fighting the Communist Party."

McCuistion, who followed his mother to the stand, declared that Curran had told him, "we'll have that Dies so thoroughly discredited in a few months that the people in Texas will ride him out on a rail." Curran was quoted as saying he had authorized a thorough investigation of Dies.

"I hope they don't find out the truth," grinned Dies amid committee laughter.

In a statement issued last night, the Communist Party here denounced Dies as "judge, prosecutor, jury and executioner, all rolled into one." The Department of Justice, said the statement, "is lending itself as a willing instrument for those who want to annihilate every shred of democracy and grease the path for America's entrance into the bloody European conflict" by obtaining the indictment of Earl Browder, Communist Party secretary, for using a false passport.

Curran Protests

The N. M. U. last night released a letter from Curran to Dies, protesting statements that no effort had been made to apprehend McCuistion prior to his appearance on the witness stand.

"Instead of being condemned, the N. M. U. should be commended for assisting in the apprehension of a fugitive," Curran wrote. "For a Government committee to attack the union for assisting in the apprehension of a man wanted for murder is, to say the least, not in the best public interest."

President's Committee Begins Study of Civil Service

appeal. The commission can have nothing to say in the matter."

Grade Changes Denied

Supreme Court Justice Reed, chairman of the President's Committee, said the trouble in dismissing "dead wood" would seem to be not in the system or commission, but in the administrator.

To Copeland's accusation of the commission being moved to change grades by political pressure, former commissioner Leonard D. White, another member of the committee, replied heatedly:

"In all my years of service on the commission, such a thing never happened. I seriously doubt that it has happened since them."

Under sharp questioning of Justice Reed, Copeland admitted he merely had "heard reports" to that effect.

"It is a very serious accusation to make on hearsay evidence," Justice Reed concluded.

Committee Member Gano Dunn smoothed ruffled feelings by showing that while the commission itself placed no barriers to dismissals, the employing officer's problem was difficult in the case of "finished mediocrities, not good enough to promote, not bad enough to fire."

Confirmation of a foregone conclusion that the committee would recommend inclusion of lawyers, technical and professional employes in the competitive civil service system came in the last ten minutes of the hearing.

Committee Disagrees

Cross-examining D. W. Robinson, jr., general counsel of the Federal Power Commission, the committee left no doubt by its questions that it disagreed violently with Robinson's plea to leave those categories in their present exempted status. Robinson was the only witness to advance this point of view.

Justice Reed, Supreme Court Justice Frankfurter, Dunn and White made no effort to conceal their amusement and disagreement. Robinson asked to submit a written statement.

Justice Frankfurter brought the curtain down on the hearing with the remark, "I'm afraid your written statement won't be any more convincing than this presentation."

Earlier in the day, the first witness, Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the House Civil Service Commission, had a brief exchange with Justice Frankfurter on the questions of geographical quotas for Federal employes, and discrimination in making legal appointments against certain law schools.

Ramspeck said he believed a merit system could not be sustained without State apportionment of employes. Otherwise, he explained, "we would build up an aristocracy of civil servants here in Washington," which neither Congress nor public opinion would tolerate. He said the public also would rebel against requirements insisting on credits from certain universities as a prerequisite for Government jobs.

Against "Previous Condition"

Justice Frankfurter agreed that no barriers of race and creed or "previous condition" should be required for Federal jobs, but insisted that training was a relevant factor and that certain types of training were best obtained in educational institutions of approved caliber.

Ramspeck also recommended extension of the civil service system to agencies now exempt and to technical legal and even investigative positions, such as Federal Bureau of Investigation agents.

Others testifying for extension of the competitive system to Government legal jobs were John K. Clark, chairman of the New York State Board of Bar Examiners, who appeared in behalf of the National Civil Service Reform League; Will Shafroth, of the American Bar Association, and Wilbur C. Pickett, of the Federal Bar Association.

Another witness, Isador Lubin, commissioner of Labor Statistics, deplored the "classification pyramid," limiting the number of highly paid positions in each agency. He said the higher pay which industry could offer to competent technical and scientific personnel tended to take the best employes from the Government service.

The hearings will be continued at 9:30 a. m. today.

C.I.O. Requests Inquiry in U. S. Sea Agencies

Maritime Committee Charges Connivance Against Labor's Rights

The C. I. O. Maritime Committee yesterday demanded a Congressional investigation of alleged anti-labor policies pursued by the Maritime Commission and Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

Charging the Federal agencies with "connivance with shipowners to destroy maritime labor's rights," the C. I. O. group called for appointment of men "able and willing to administer the Government's merchant marine program."

The public has a right to know whether the President's merchant marine program is being honestly administered, the statement said, because through Government grants and subsidies to shipping "the people already own the merchant marine 20 times over."

Included in the C .I. O. study on "The Maritime Commission Versus the Seamen" were charges that:

The Maritime Commission has denied to seamen employed on its ships the collective bargaining rights guaranteed them under the Wagner act.

Union hiring halls have been "undermined" by the commission's revvial of "Shipping Commissioners' Hiring Halls."

Shipowners have been permitted, in violation of the merchant marine act of 1936, to have repairs made on their vessels in foreign ports, "particularly German ports."

The commission "took the lead" in forcing "wholly inadequate compensation" on seamen during the recent war risk insurance controversy.

Thousands of dollars in fines levied against ship operators for violation of safety laws have been remitted or reduced by the Bureau of Marine Inspection.

President Sees Work Progress On Memorial

Roosevelt Drives To Jefferson Temple Site for Inspection

President Roosevelt yesterday took advantage of the beautiful day to drive to the uncompleted $3,000,000 Jefferson Memorial at Tidal Basin and inspect progress of the work.

He chatted with an engineer on the site, and showed great interest in the use of Vermont and Georgia marble. He watched a crane handle the large slab of marble on which the cornerstone will rest. The slab, he was told, cost $700.

The President will lay the cornerstone November 15.

Leaving the memorial site, the Presidential party drove to Hains Point and looked over the Danish training ship Danmark. The President was accompanied by Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary; Brig. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, his secretary and military aide, and Capt. Daniel J. Callaghan, his naval aide.

His trip to the memorial project, the White House said, was in fulfillment of a promise made to John McShain, Philadelphia contractor, who is building the library at Hyde Park to house the President's papers.

The President turned the first shovel of earth on the site a year ago.

A Really High Flier!

"What's the fare from Washington to 10,000 feet?" a prospective passenger asked United Air Lines yesterday.

Since the Civil Areonautics Authority never set a rate for such travel, the business was turned over to Bill Payne, who operates a plane service at Washington Airport.

Payne quoted the customer $20—and which provided the necessary round trip.

Mission Left Legacy, Says Alexandrian

$250,000 Willed To Crittenton Homes, Asserts Barrett, Director

Dr. Robert S. Barrett, of Alexandria, Va., national president of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, announced yesterday that a legacy of $250,000 has been left the mission by Robert Clark, of Peoria, Ill., who died October 4. He has also been advised, he said, that Mr. Clark's will provided for an outright gift of $150,000 to the Crittenton home in Peoria, in addition to the legacy for the national organization.

The legacy will be added to the endowment fund of the national mission, which already totals several million dollars, Dr. Barrett said. A portion of the income will be used for the education and training of girls at mission homes in various sections of the country.

Founded by an Alexandrian, the late Dr. Kate Waller Barrett, 55 years ago, the mission maintains 5 homes in the United States and Canada as refuges for unmarried mothers and their babies. Nearby homes maintained by the organization are at Clifton Station, Va., and Washington.

Mrs. Goods Leaves $98,000

An estate valued at approximately $98,000 was left by Mrs. Isabel Goods, who died at her home in Alexandria several weeks ago, according to her will, admitted to probate in the Alexandria Circuit Court yesterday. The estate is to be left in trust to the Citizens' National Bank, which qualified as executor and trustee.

Court Clerk Elliott F. Hoffman appointed C. C. Brown, C. T. Nicholson, and Chester G. Pierce as appraisers.

Aside from several personal bequests, the will provides that the proceeds from the estate be paid to her son, Albert B. Goods, and on his death to his children. It provides that when the last of her son's children is dead, the remainder of the estate shall be divided equally among the Alexandria Hospital, the Alexandria Day Nursery, the Anne Lee Memorial Home for the Aged, and St. Mary's Church.

Judge Snow Reappointed

Judge William S. Snow, of Alexandria, a member of the Virginia Game and Inland Fisheries Commission for the last four years, was notified yesterday by Gov. Price of his reappointment for a four-year term. He will continue to serve until June 30, 1943.

Judge Snow for a number of years has been an active sponsor of the conservation movement in the northern Virginia sector, and is actively associated with the Izaak Walton Leagues of Virginia.

$3,463 in Fines, Fees

The sum of $3,463.65 was brought to the city of Alexandria through police court fines, trial fees, warrant fees, filing fees and confiscated money in civil and criminal cases in October, according to the monthly report of Bailiff Park E. Ticer, submitted yesterday.

Fines to the State and to Elliot F. Hoffman, clerk of the Corporation Court, amounted to $131.25, the report stated. A total of $132.25 was collected in fees to City Sergeant R. E. Cox for service of civil warrants and other duties.

The police court clerk collected and disbursed $277.90 in the juvenile and domestic relations court.

Pair Found Dead In Tourist Cabin Near Staunton

Staunton, Va., Nov. 1 (AP).—Augusta County authorities announced today a woman found dead in a tourist cabin at Fishersville Tuesday had been identified as Mrs. Emma Simpson, a widow of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The identification was made by a sister who arrived today from New York. Mrs. Simpson was said to have been visiting in the vicinity of Crozet.

Augusta County police tentatively identified the man as D. O'Sullivan or D. O. Sullivan, of Bland, Va., from hunting licenses and cards found among his effects.

The couple had rented a cabin the night before. Coroner C. P. Obenschain said they apparently died accidentally before midnight. All windows and doors were found tightly closed, with the gas flame of a heating stove burning high.

Mrs. Smith also said bus service would be inaugurated within ten days for children in the Franklin avenue section. She reported on progress of the Parkside school addition.

Delegates elected to the association's executive committee from three subdivisions were James Sweet, Highland View; Lewis Carter, Argyle Park, and James Benn, Indian Spring Park. John L. Dean of Highland View, was appointed chairman of the public utilities commission by President Ralph Torrey.

Western Union Ordered to End Its Union

NLRB Directs Wire Firm to Pay Back Checked Off Dues

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday ordered the Western Union Telegraph Co. to disestablish and withdraw all recognition from a company union which has been in operation for more than 20 years.

The board also ordered the company to reimburse its employes for all money deducted from their wages as dues to the association by the check-off system since July 5, 1935.

The decision, made after an investigation and hearings covering more than two years, was one of the most sweeping issued by the NLRB in its history.

It was hailed immediately by the American Communications Associations, a C. I. O. affiliate, as a "green light" to press for the enlistment of 45,000 Western Union employes throughout the United States.

Telegraphists Complained

Complaint against the company union was made by the Radio Telegraphists' Association, which later became the American Communications Association, and hearings were held in summer of 1938 in New York, headquarters of Western Union.

The board found that the telegraph company, by preferring for employment applicants indicating a willingness to join the association and by according various forms of favored treatment to its members, encouraged membership in the company union and discouraged membership in the American Communications Association and other labor organizations.

The Association of Western Union Employes was formed in 1918, "through sponsorship and direction of the company and in pursuance of the company's admitted policy of prohibiting employes from joining labor organizations of their choice," the board stated in announcing the decision.

Disputed With Wilson

"Its formation closely followed, in point of time, the refusal of the Western Union Co. to comply with recommendations of President Woodrow Wilson's National War Labor Board.

"The War Board had recommended that the company reinstate discharged employes found to have been discriminated against because of membership in the Commercial Telegraphers' Union. Newcomb Carlton, then president of the company, testified at the hearing that Woodrow Wilson had labor theories 'which I do not share.'"

Daniel Driesen, legislative representative of the American Communications Association, said that the C. I. O. union was now conducting a Nation-wide campaign to organize Western Union employes.

Strike on Coast

Calling attention to a strike being conducted against Western Union in San Francisco, he added:

"The decision issued by the NLRB wipes out the last remaining argument of Western Union officials, who have, for the last seven weeks, refused to bargain with their striking San Francisco employes on the ground that the compnay already had an agreement with a bona fide labor organization, the Association of Western Union Employes."

He predicted that "better working conditions, higher pay and shorter hours will prevail in the telegraph industry" when Western Union employes are organized completely by the C. I. O. union.

Girl May Lose Arm as Result of Halloween Prank

A Halloween prank may result in the loss of the left arm of Mary E. Walton, 11, 105 Cockerill avenue, Takoma Park, Md., injured last night while playing near Elm and Carroll avenues in Takoma Park.

As Mary stepped off a porch she was struck in the left arm by some unidentified object. She was taken to the office of Dr. H. T. Morse, who said she may lose her arm.

Companions of the girl told police they saw a group of boys throw something toward them. Mary was unable to tell a coherent story because of shock and the loss of blood.

Bids Asked for $250,000 U. of Va. Hospital Addition

Work on Five-Story Structure Expected to Start in December; Space Provided for 171 More Beds in Public Wards

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 1.—The University of Virginia today advertised for bids on preliminary construction of a new addition to the university hospital and medical school building, to cost a total of $250,000. Funds for this addition have been provided by the State, and it is planned to start work early in December.

The addition will consist of a five-story structure to be built in front of the three original units of the University of Virginia Hospital, which were built between 1901 and 1906.

The General Assembly, at its 1938 session, made a conditional appropriation of $250,000 for the hospital addition, as well as a similar appropriation of $75,000 for equipment. Gov. Price this week signified that the release of the $250,000 would not, in his opinion, create a deficit in the treasury of the commonwealth.

Detailed Plans Bared

Meanwhile President John Lloyd Newcomb and the rector and visitors of the university authorized detailed plans and specifications to be prepared by R. E. Lee Taylor, of Baltimore, an alumnus who has designed other university buildings, including the Alderman Library and the recently completed neuro-psychiatric addition to the medical group.

The new addition will provide space for 171 additional beds in public wards, and will bring the total bed capacity of the university hospital up to about 550. For some time the present public wards have been very congested, and it has frequently been necessary to place beds in the halls in order ot accommodate all who came seeking treatment.

The addition will be in the general shape of a large letter E, with its back extending out toward East Range, to a line with the present Barringer Pavilion, and the three fingers reaching back to the three oldest units of the hospital.

Large Public Wards

The basement floor will be used for the orthopedic service, and for storage space for all of the hospital services.

Reception rooms, administration offices and business offices will occupy the front and central part of the first or ground floor. On either side will be large public wards, one for men, one for women, each to accommodate 21 beds, with necessary kitchens and equipment rooms.

Six new operating rooms will extend across most of the front of the second floor. The central connecting unit will be given over to dressing and cleaning rooms, rooms for anesthetics, for sterlizing nad for other special features, while the operating suites will be flanked by two surgical wards with 20 beds each, one for men, one for women.

Also a Teaching Room

The third floor of the addition will be given over almost entirely to wards, two of them large enough to accommodate 21 beds, but several of them for only six beds, and some even smaller. There will be a teaching room and several smaller laboratories.

The departments of the eye and of ear, nose and throat, ophthalmology and otolaryngology, as they are called, will be given enlarged quarters on the fourth floor. Here will be examination and treatment rooms, dark rooms and small operating rooms. Across the front will be four wards to accommodate five beds each, while on the sides will be two wards, each for seven beds.

The exterior of the building will be of red brick with stone and plaster trim and will conform to the Barringer Pavilion and to other recent additions to the hospital.

Graff Exhibits Best 'Mum in Takoma Show

Mrs. Fulton Lewis, Of East Falls Church, Is High Point Scorer

A white "Oconto" chysanthemum exhibited by George U. Graff, 242 Peabody street northwest, was adjudged the best flower in the thirteenth annual chrysanthemum show of the Takoma Horticultural Club, which opened last night at the Takoma branch of the Public Library, Fifth and Cedar streets northwest.

Although Mrs. Fulton Lewis, of East Falls, Va., held 37 points, the highest number in the show, Dr. Edwin C. Powell, exhibition chairman, announced that Graff so far holds the most points toward winning the silver cup awarded by the club each year. Graff scored 34 points in last night's show, but has been a leading exhibitor in nearly all the other shows of the year. The cup will be awarded November 27 at the regular meeting.

Mrs. Lewis won the most points in the collection class of 25 varieties. Her display of a bowl filled with pink and lavender gerber with white petunias won recognition in the "other flower class." The club advertised an award of special recognition to an outstanding exhibit, but the committee stated since the show was larger than any 'mum show held by the club with approximately 1,000 blooms displayed it could not be fair in selecting one exhibit. It was held to be the prettiest and best show the club has held this year. Miss Margaret Lancaster and J. Wise Byrnes were the judges. H. C. Kinner, 301 Kennedy street northwest, won the ribbon for the second best bloom, exhibiting a "Lillian Doty" in pink lavender. A white "Doty" won the third place for W. H. Shaw, 1801 Wyoming avenue northwest.

The show will be open today from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m.

Montgomery Frees Fritz On Bail After Halloween Raid

Inn Proprietor Admitted to $5,000 Bond on Charge of Liquor Sale Violations; Faces Trial Tomorrow on Another Count

Sources of liquor alleged to have been sold illegally by Peter Fritz, proprietor of the Log Cabin Inn in Montgomery County, Md., will be investigated, Ben G. Wilkinson, State's attorney, said yesterday.

Fritz was charged with ten violations of the State liquor laws yesterday after a Halloween night raid on the inn. He was released on $5,000 bond.

Led by Wilkinson and Police Chief Charles M. Orme, a raiding squad of 12 officers descended on the Log Cabin Inn during a Halloween party early yesterday and said they confiscated a quantity of whisky, beer and wine. Fritz was charged with selling and possessing alcoholic beverages without a license and eight employes of the inn were held under bond as material witnesses. More than 40 patrons were detained in the establishment for an hour.

Under the law, distributors must submit to the county liquor board sworn statements of every sale to a tretail dealer. An investigation disclosed no records of any sales to Fritz.

The raid on the Log Cabin Inn was staged after one of the county police officers, in plain clothes, had obtained evidence of a sale while mingling with the guests at the establishment. The raiding squad was armed with a search warrant obtained on the basis of this evidence.

Fritz was freed yesterday on $5,000 bond and his trial was tentatively set for November 10.

A previous charge against Fritz of selling beer without a license was dismissed by Magistrate Ralph G. Shure a week ago on the ground the warrant was defective. Fritz was rearrested several hours later on another warrant. He is to be tried again on this charge tomorrow before Judge Shure at Silver Spring.

Montgomery Commuting Rates Upheld

I. C. C. Lets Company Drop Through Runs, But Interstate Fees Stand Till January

Montgomery Bus Lines, Inc., a subsidiary of the Capital Transit Co., was prevented from withdrawing its interstate rate tickets yesterday by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The order was issued on the company's proposal to put into effect a new schedule of rates between the District and Bethesda, Gaithersburg, Rockville and Washington Grove.

The ICC order does not affect the company's plan to discontinue through service, which becamc effective yesterday. Neither does the order affect the fares to be paid by patrons riding only in Maryland. But Maryland residents who commute to Washington, may use the old interstate tickets.

The ICC order is effective until January 30 pending an investigation into the company's proposed schedule of rates.

The Maryland public service commission has approved the change in the rate schedule. It calls for lower fares between points near the District and an increase to points beyond Bethesda.

Brookneal, Va., Nov. 1 (AP).—State Trooper W. H. Good said tonight Raleigh Johnson, of near Danville, has been arrested for questioning in connection with the slaying of Mrs. Wirt Hamlett, 41, at her home near Sugar Hill.

The dead woman was found by her husband and her 14-year-old son when they returned from South Boston about 11:30 o'clock this morning.

The dead woman's daughter, Christine, 12, told the officers that Johnson, who is the child's uncle, was at the house talking to her mother when she left for school at 8 o'clock this morning.

Deanna Durbin Scores Fifth Consecutive Hit

'First Love', at Keith's, Is New 'Cinderella': Short Subjects Complete Excellent Bill; Eddie Cantor Receives Another Honor

"FIRST LOVE." Universal picturization of a screen play by Bruce Manning, starring Deanna Durbin, with Helen Parrish, Robert Stack, Eugene Pallette, Lewis Howard, Leatrice Joy, June Storey, Charles Coleman, Marcia Mae Jones, Samuel S. Hinds, Kathleen Howard, Jack Mulhall, Mary Treen, Mary Vaughn, Frank Jenks and Lucille Ward. Directed by Henry Koster. Reviewed Wednesday morning. At RKO-Keith's Theater.

THERE WAS a twofold importance in the world premiere of Deanna Durbin's new picture, "First Love," at RKO-Keith's Theater yesterday. Not only was it the first time that this Universal production ever had been presented on a public screen, but it also marked the first time the prodigious young singer-actress ever has appeared as a radiant young woman who has emerged from, and escaped, all of the juvenile implications of adolescence. It was an eminently successful occasion from both points of view.

BELL

Deanna Durbin no longer is a child. She is a poised and richly gifted "grown up" who has sacrificed none of the charm of her naive and simple simulation of a typical American girl to that precarious interval of her career which is usually referred to as the "transitional period." Except for an increased assurance and an indefinable quality of mature command of mood and situation, Miss Durbin is about as she always has been—the foremost of the younger actresses whose endowments extend beyond the mere possession of a fabulous soprano voice for one of her years. It is in the quality and use of that voice that the charming Miss Durbin displays the greatest advancement in an art that overtook her at schoolgirl age. She sings with a degree of finish, purity of tone and expanding power that brings many steps nearer the career in grand opera that she once confided to me was her nebulous and unspoken ambition. That ambition need no longer remain either hazy or inarticulate.

"First Love" is not the most pretentious screen play in which Deanna Durbin has appeared, but neither is it one that will permit her star to recede in the estimation of those who perceived the promise of great things in "Three Smart Girls," "One Hundred Men and a Girl," "Three Smart Girls Grow Up" and the others of the five hit pictures in which she has been seen during a brief career that never has known a failure. It is a revamped and streamlined version of the story of "Cinderella" that forms the basis of "First Love." The fact that her first celluloid kiss is registered in this footage of celluloid has scant bearing upon the worth of the film. It occasioned its recipient no visible symbols of emotional novelty and certainly struck yesterday's first audience as no great departure from the usual developments of gelatin fables that have Cupid as an unobtrusive background figure.

Only a "Fairy Tale"

The picture quite frankly states that it is just another "fairy tale" of a "Cinderella" who lost a slipper at a fashionable New York ball in the home of the season's most eligible bachelor and so managed to disconcert a household of the ultra-rich in which her only friends were the servants and the mightily harassed head of an opulent menage in which he could find peace only when all the rest of the family were out on their gay and utterly artificial social rounds. There is, of course, a snippy and completely self-centered debutante daughter in the family and a lazy male cousin who entertains an unique philosophy of living, not to mention a mother whose interests are centered in astrology, horoscopes and the infallible signs of the zodiac as a means of bringing unexampled complexities into her home.

It is when the orphaned Connie Harding is mistaken for a great prima donna at Ted Drake's gold-plated party, in an establishment architectured after the general dimensions of the Grand Central Station, that the catty Barbara Clinton is put in her place, largely through the helpful connivance of the servants in Barbara's home, who manage a splendid delay in the park, while "Cinderella" is speeding to the rout under police escort and arrayed in finery which has been surreptitiously supplied by those "below stairs."

Comedy, Emotion, Melody

The gossamer story, with its candid admission of origin, abounds in comedy touches, tugs at the heart strings and liltingly beautiful music. The Durbin voice is heard in "Home, Sweet Home," Strauss' "Spring in My Heart" and "One Fine Day," from Puccini's "Madam Butterfly" as its principal numbers. They are gloriously sung in a manner that reflects the efficient coaching of Andre de Segurola.

Matching the skill of Deanna's portrayal of the pivotal role is Helen Parrish, who also is growing up. Miss Parrish offers a splendid interpretation of a thoroughly distasteful character and proves herself a young actress well worth watching. Two former stars of the silent films also are conspicuously cast—Leatrice Joy, as Mrs. Clinton, and Jack Mulhall, as the family chauffeur. Eugene Pallette, as the father; Kathleen Howard, as an acidulous school ma'rm with a saccharine heart; Robert Stack, the young lover; Lewis Howard, the somnolent Walter Clinton, and Charles Coleman, as the understanding butler, render support of the highest order.

Miss Durbin, to put the matter briefly, finds herself in the enviable position of having her fifth consecutive hit on her hands.

The supplementary subjects on the new bill at Keith's are such as to make the program practically bullet-proof. Foremost among the short-reels is the latest issue of "The March of Time," devoted to "Uncle Sam—The Farmer." In this carefully documented release, "Time" devotes its attention to the cultivation of the United States' billion acres of agricultural land, with particular attention to the mistakes that were made in overplanting during the last World War and a word of warning against the same error in the present era of European conflict. It pays a considerable tribute, incidentally, to the wisdom of the United States Department of Agriculture and the work that has been done in reclaiming the dust bowl created by avarice during the duration of the Great War. The color cartoon is "Andy Panda," one of the Walter Lantz whimsies, and it is a honey. The Pathe News completes an entertainment that never falls short of being precisely that.

An eleventh hour visit with Eddie Cantor yesterday afternoon was productive of a high measure of concrete evidence of the value placed upon his activities in behalf of Americanism, humanitarianism and all-around broad thinking. The visit took a perambulating form and led to the office of Speaker Bankhead and of the House of Representatives, where Eddie was presented with a parchment of "The Creed of the United States," written, and bestowed upon the comedian by Minority Clerk William Tyler Page, of the lower house. As one who looked upon his few serious moments on the stage at Loew's Capitol last week as highly appropriate and genuinely forceful, it was gratifying to observe in how much greater esteem they are held by those in high positions of government. This deep-seated patriotism of Eddie's is no idle or counterfeit pose, nor any specious sort of "flag-waving." I will have something more to say about this later, when time and space are more propitious. Cantor's head may be among the stars, but his feet are firmly on the ground.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

You can laugh—I did—when told the war increases length of screen kisses! Asked Eddie Goulding about it and he said: "Hedda, the more war clouds, the more release we must have for our emotions! When all the world's padlocked in hate, what's a better antidote than love? We'll have more love stories, embraces and kisses than ever before—and they'll linger longer." "That's right," added Mike Curtiz, "there'll be plenty of love and many kisses. In happier days I'd say 'cut' sooner!" I wonder if the Hays office will agree.

HOPPER

It's news in Hollywood when a star-cast turns out to see the opening of two kids who have danced with them in the chorus of some of their pictures. Of course, I'm referring to those show-stoppers Mary Parker, corseted and bustled, floating like a bit of thistle in the arms of Billy Daniels at the Beverly Wilshire, after their ten months successful engagement at the St. Regis.

When Ann Shirley finishes "Vigil in the Night" she's going to make an impersonal appearance as Mrs. John Wayne, the wife of the band leader . . . Ann Sothern, in old clothes, was catching up on some gardening the other day when she looked up and discovered a fan taking 16 mm. pictures of her. She dashed into the house—forgetting that Sothern hospitality . . . Charlie Chaplin's impersonation of Gene Towne is so hilarious he ought to do it in "The Dictator" or rename the picture "Our Towne" . . . Tony Martin says he never saw anybody work as fast as Andre Kostelanetz. In three days, doing only six hours a day, the maestro wrote, arranged, conducted and directed music for "Passport to Happiness" . . . Travis Banton, who designed clothes for Colbert, Lombard and Dietrich when a Paramount picture was the best show in town, has flown to New York to dress—not undress—a musical comedy. While there he'll live with his friends, Lily Dache and her husband . . . Barbara Stanwyck's bad right arm is still under the doctor's care—three times a day . . . My lid's off to Producer Max Gordon who had the courage to give his namesake (but not his relation), Ruth Gordon, to Hollywood for "Abe Lincoln." She's superb—looks like a daguerrotype of your grandmother. Now she's doing the lead opposite Ed Robinson in "Dr. Ehrlich." Our boys said, just as they did years ago about Helen Hayes, that Ruth wasn't pretty enough for pictures.

I wonder if George Kaufman and Moss Hart got that brilliant caricature "The Man Who Came to Dinner" in which they practically annihilate Alexander Woollcott, and for which the New York audience cheerfully pays $25 for a pair of seats, from the incident that happened to Elizabeth Arden? She knew a countess once—I said once, who came for dinner, was taken ill, put to bed and stayed for weeks on end; when she finally got her place back it was a shambles.

Double Bill Of Rare Merit At the Little

"The City" and New Scot Comedy Form Interesting Program

No intelligent or wit-loving citizen should miss the Little's neat double bill which opened yesterday. The grey matter will be stimulated by "The City," a 45 minute documentary on urban planning, while the funny-bone will be tickled by "This Man is News," a daft English comedy of bloody "moither."

Too much cannot be said for "The City." It is, in the first place, hugely entertaining with its ironic shots of us everyday city folk risking life and limb crossing a street, or trying to get away from that ole debbil city of a Sunday afternoon. So the awesome sounding "documentary" should frighten no one.

But it is what "The City" says that makes it important. "Year by year our cities grow more complex and less fit for living. The age of rebuilding is here. We must remould our old cities and build new communities better suited to our needs," says the foreword. A brief salute to our quiet, small-town past gives way to the shocking conditions of our industrial cities where "smoke means prosperity." The point of the film comes with views of country settlements made possible by motor transportation and brainy road-building. Nearby Greenbelt and New Jersey's Radburn are among the urban developments shown. Pare Lorenz supplied the original outline, Morris Carnovsky is the narrator and there is a striking score by Aaron Copland.

A Scotch "Thin Man"

"This Man is News" is something else again. It is funny, although just how much of it is intentionally so we couldn't tell, but giving our cousins across the water the benefit of the doubt, let's say they meant Simon and Pat Drake to be another Mr. and Mrs. Thin Man and succeeded.

Simon is another of those cocky reporters who deserved the sack he got. He and his witty missus sit up to celebrate, lap away three bottles of champagne. Thus fortified he phones his Scot city editor and declares that he has just witnessed the murder he has been forecasting for days. When it turns out that he was not only right, but that he forecast the murder by several hours, the fat is in the fire and our man is in Scotland Yard.

Beside the banter of our reporter and his wife, there is an amazing portrait of a city editor by Alastair Sims, a Scot comic, whose harried frenzy is something to remember. Barry K. Barnes is the demon reporter of Fleet street and Valerie Hobson is the wife whose motto is "Be Prepared."

G. W. Players Open Season In One-Acters

Long a lingerer in the shadow of death, George Washington University's once respected Cue and Curtain Club last night showed signs of vitality. A. S. R. O. audience of several hundred, in the undercroft of the Western Presbyterian church, evinced strong student interest and at least one play of three one-acters was worth serious consideration.

Under the aegis of Eugene M. Lerner, the club this year has a definite plan. During the course of the school year it will present a series of six evenings of short plays. Judges are to choose the three best performances of each evening and a final group by these players at the year's end will decide the University's best performer. The plan, like any other, has its defects, but its most encouraging virtue is the interest and competition it has whetted.

Curtain-raiser and best dramalet of the trio was "The Valiant," the Holworthy Hall-Robert Middlemass piece which served Bert Lytell so long and sturdily in the bright days of vaudeville. It concerns the silent murderer, Dyke, who refuses to give his true identity because of the anguish it will cause his family. Prison chaplain and warden plead with him to set at rest the suspicions of thousands that he is their long-lost black sheep. A young girl is sent by the governor to convince herself as to whether the prisoner is her brother. Her mother is too sick to accompany her. The young man convinces her that her suspicions are unfounded, but one knows that he is truly, "The Valiant."

Salamanca Scores

Jack Salamanca, a 17-year-old freshman, handled the leading role with telling sincerity. He wisely underplayed consistently; in fact, this restraint hampered the effect of some of his speeches, which were occasionally low mumbles. But it was a worthwhile and understandable piece of work. S Jayne Harrison was the girl, bringing a welcome simplicity to her final scene. Charles E. Corker brought a finely vibrant voice, but too sanctimonious a manner, to the part of the chaplain. Sydney Hay, Ivorson Hutton and William Darnell completed the cast, which gained fine advantage from Lerner's well-paced direction.

"His Frst Date," James Reach's comedy of a movie star's acquaintance with a respectable banker, needed considerably more zest to enliven its definitely farcical situation. William Zeller, Marianna Trowbridge, Louise Dyer, Harry Merliss, Ann Tilghman and Gloria Rea were the players under Betty Green's direction.

In the Roadside manner, but in need of those players' cold-blooded "hamming," was Albert Ostrow's antique impression, "Hounded by Hate." Sara Lucille White glided admirably, as the gal about to be plunked from her homestead through the mortgage process, and Julian Hatcher was superb as the scratching Zeke. Phil Young, Salvatore Giarratano, Dorothy Glogovac, Dee Switgall, Keith Adamson and Al Levesque completed the cast under Harold Monor's direction.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Nov. 1 (INS).—If Kate Smith wants to take time out to make a movie the job is hers. Darryl Zanuck has told me that he is greatly interested in starring her in "Moon Over the Mountain," an original, telling the story that parallel's Kate's own colorful and successful career. But the radio song bird has an aversion to facing the camera after her former experience at Paramount and it will take a lot of coaxing to make her change her mind.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Those were not the perfected 1939 days when she did her one and only movie. Stories are better today and there are new technical developments.

To the majority of us the word G-Men means gangsters, underworld murderers and exciting chases to find criminals. Yet today I heard of a new vocation for these Federal officers and one that is being interestingly related in "Heritage of the Wild," a story bought by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The authors, Nathaniel West and Gordon Kahn, tell of the lengths Uncle Sam goes to to protect wild birds, and especially the rare specimens which often find their way as a food delicacy into cafes. G-Men are instructed to enforce the law to the limit wherever careless hunters kill these wild denizens of the sky. Robert Young will play the role of the G-Man who hopes to capture gangsters and instead is given the bird assignment which eventually he finds to his liking.

The American reporter who cabled back: "The war is a washout and so is the weather" seems to have described the static condition over there perfectly. In fact, things are at such a standstill in London that the movie studios are starting up again with "Major Barbara," the Ernest Pascal picture set to get under way in ten days. The delay was really a stroke of luck for Pascal for it made it possible for him to get Robert Morley, the portly young Englishman who made such a stir in "Marie Antoinette," to headline his cast with Wendy Hiller. Too bad that Harold Schuster, who went over to direct "Major Barbara" won't be able to return, because he has signed a contract with Universal in the meantime.

The little Durbin girl has grown up almost over night. She has matured unbelievably since "Three Smart Girls Grow Up" and has lost that little girl look. She has an added charm in her maturity and a new dignity that is pleasing. I can't say enough for the brilliancy with which Joe Pasternak and Henry Koster have guided her career. This newest picture keeps pace with the others. Betzi Stack's boy, Bob, is a pleasant surprise. He shows great promise as Deanna's first movie boy friend.

Snaphopts of Hollywood collected at random: Ann Sheridan and Anatole Litvak in a secluded corner at the Beverly Tropics; The diamond necklace being worn by Mrs. Duncan McMartin is the sensation of Movietown; it's colossal; Jimmy Bryant and Ruth Skinner (Nick Stuart's ex) having more fun at The Club 17; Jackie Cooper hasn't missed a day buying luncheon for Peggy Moran at the Universal commissary; Sally Eilers hostessed a dinner for Charlie Mayer last night. He is an executive of the San Francisco Examiner and brother of Billy Mayer, who weds Katherine Hayward Friday; Ginger Rogers fit to be tied when a photographer snapped her in the La Conga. It wasn't the fact that she was with Billy Bakewell that irked her, but she didn't want her new hair-do made public.

Rita Beery Foyt, Wally's ex, and her groom applauding Slapsy Maxie's nonsense. She is well again; Mary Rogers, Will's girl, and Eddie Grainger, a twosome of two years ago, at the La Conga together; Deanna Durbin the gayest and happiest member of the party she gave after her preview at Victor Hugos. Her escort was, of course, Vaughn Paul while Bobby Stack brought Cobina Wright, jr.; Hal Roach, jr., and Carole Landis at the La Conga for Steffi Duna's opening; Jane Withers, now a real young lady, has gone to Utica, N. Y., with her mother to attend the "Drums Along the Mohawk" opening; Jimmy Cagney starts a ten weeks' holiday when he finishes "The Fighting 69th" with a new contract in his pocket because he's been such a good boy.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

The New Yorker

New York, Nov. 1.

THE CLOSING of the World's Fair and the reported presence of the Bremen in Murmansk, Russia, make this story a timely one: Six months ago three Russian aviators flew to New York to represent their country at the opening of the Fair . . . At that time I wrote: "Ambassador Oumansky brought the fliers to the Stork Club and told us that they were returning to Russia via the French Line . . . 'Why don't they sail on the Bremen the German ship?' I asked Oumansky . . . The diplomat made no direct outburst. He pursed his lips coldly and glared . . . 'And that,' he added, 'is putting it mildly.'"

LAURA INGALLS, who ran into license trouble when she dropped anti-war leaflets from her plane flying over the Capitol, will resume this practice—but this time she'll drop them over New Jersey . . . Aaron Sapiro, the lawyer who testified against Harry Bridges at the deportation proceedings against the West Coast labor leader, will testify before the Dies Committee . . . Sophie Tucker and Eddie Cantor, who had a furious battle last summer because of the A. F. A. dispute, effected their reconciliation in Washington this week.

A FEW DAYS AGO the attorney for Judge Manton made his appeal for a reversal . . . Mention was made of the fact that Fallon, the alleged intermediary, had told the bribe-givers that he could "deliver" not only Judge Manton but also two other Federal jurists, Judges Moscowitz and Hand—who, as a matter of fact, are above reproach. . . . But, as a matter of additional fact, Fallon named a fourth judge in his exaggerated boast of the influence he wielded. No mention of this has been made by United States Attorney Cahill, although the witness' affidavit is in his possession. Cahill didn't press it, out of respect to the United States Supreme Court. The man Fallon named is Justice Stone—one of the jurists now presiding at the Manton appeal.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is still withholding his permission to continue the Birthday Ball celebrations . . . William Saroyan has practically completed his next play, "Love's Old Sweet Thing," which Eddie Dowling will produce . . . Jimmy Savo is writing to friends here informing that he now operates a successful mining business in Italy . . . David Belasco's old telephone number has been assigned to Labor Stage, producers of "Pins & Needles" . . . Louis Bromfield will leave for Hollywood this week to write the screen play for "The Life of Brigham Young."

THE NEWSPAPERS have just reported Eleanor Holm's denial of the story which appeared in True Confessions, which quoted her as having said: "Adolf Hitler gave me a better break than Avery Brundage did" . . . This is the real story, as Eleanor Holm told it in this space on February 13: Hitler tendered a party at which she was present and assured her that if she had been a member of the German team she would have been allowed to participate in the Olympics despite her sipping champagne . . . "You mean," Eleanor asked him, "I wouldn't have been punished?" . . . "Of course you wouldn't have been punished," Der Fuehrer replied, "—unless you lost."

ED REILLY, Hauptmann's lawyer, was at El Morocco Sunday night, wearing the striped trousers and black coat he wore at the Flemington trial. Instead of the sunflower, however, Reilly wore a tiny carnation. "The flower's smaller," he explained "because my fees now are smaller" . . . When a young columnist invited Gene Fowler to write a guest column, Fowler replied: "An old journalist is a ham to the last, and the mere chance to spring into print over his own name fills him with a fire-horse abandon. That is how I captured Ben Hecht to do prize fights for nothing on the old Telegraph when I was its sixty-ninth editor (the old fighting sixty-ninth.)"

DARRYL ZANUCK is dangling screen contracts before the anxious eyes of Buster Keaton as a result of Keaton's performance in "Hollywood Cavalcade" . . . Those contracts will prohibit Keaton from making any personal appearances in night clubs . . . Once, despite the warnings of his manager, Keaton acknowledged a night-club introduction by taking the floor, doing a snake-dance routine, concluding with a solid flop on his face. He arose, bleeding, and was rushed to a hospital, where four stitches were taken in his forehead . . . "That's terrible," his manager groaned . . . Keation turned to him, bared his right arm and said: "You think that's terrible? Look at this—broken the same way last year."

Doctors' Tests Hint Cure for Endocarditis

Sulfapyridine and Heparin Appear to Be Effective in Cases

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 1.—Apparent discovery of the first effective treatment for acute endocarditis, a heart disease heretofore almost invariably fatal, was announced today in the American Medical Association's Journal.

The medicines which may prove of great value are the liverlike substance heparin, which prevents blood from coagulating or clotting, and sulfapyridine, which checks growth of bacteria.

Physicians reported these drugs caused "striking improvement" in patients suffering from endocarditis. Previously there had been only rare cases of recovery from the disease, which usually occurs during some severe illness.

Two Groups Report

The possibility that heparin and sulfapyridine may be of benefit was indicated in the reports of two groups of doctors—Saul R. Kelson and Paul D. White, both of Boston; and Meyer Friedman of San Francisco and W. W. Hamburger and L. N. Katz, both of Chicago.

The Chicago physicians, who used heparin alone, found that it kept the blood more fluid and seemed to prevent the laying down of blood platelets and fibrin (blood protein, the main constituent of a blood clot), on inflamed areas of the heart's lining.

This permitted the infection-fighting white blood cells to come in contact with the diseased areas, sterilizing and repairing them.

The Boston doctors used both heparin and sulfapyridine and reported that three patients, able to take the heparin for more than a week, improved so greatly that they have been free from evidences of the disease for 19, 18 and 4 weeks.

20,000 to Die in Year

Chicago, Nov. 1 (AP).—Dr. William D. Haggard, of Nashville, Tenn., one of the country's leading surgeons, said today 1939 Government figures indicated that 20,000 persons, averaging 27 years of age, would die of appendicitis and its complications this year.

Dr. Haggard, former president of the American College of Surgeons, said that of these 20,000 persons who will die only 2,000 would actually die of appendicitis. Seventeen thousand will die of peritonitis and 1,000 from contributing causes.

Dr. Haggard said that only one person out of seven who had taken a laxative during an appendicitis attack had a chance to live.

Widener Stops Here and Visits New National Gallery of Art

Joseph E. Widener, philanthropist and art connoisseur, yesterday visited the new National Gallery of Art of which he is a trustee.

In art circles here and in New York it has long been reported that Widener would present at least a major part of his $50,000,000 collection of painting, sculpture and tapestries to the gallery now being completed here.

David E. Finley, director of the institution, who accompanied Widener on his inspection tour, refused to say whether the collection had been offered to the gallery, for which funds were provided by the late Andrew Mellon.

A Widener spokesman said the millionaire sportsman was only "stopping over a few hours" en route to his Philadelphia home, Lynnewood Hall.

Challedon's Victory Earns 'Horse of Year' Title

Foe From Argentine Yields Grudgingly in Long Stretch Duel After Taking Lead

(Walter Haight's story of the Pimlico Special will be found on Page 1.)

By Bob Considine.

Pimlico, Md., Nov. 1.—"You shall not cower in the dust, Challedon, my Challedon . . . " runs the first two lines of Maryland's new State song—and today the big bay hero of the anthem lived up to the lyrics.

He became the champion thoroughbred of the year, beyond all question, by beating Kayak II by half a length to win the third annual Pimlico Special. He won it like a champion in the last rib-straining quarter mile, after Charles S. Howard's great imported star had thundered into the lead coming into the stretch.

The $10,000 purse increased the 3-year-old Challedon's winnings to $252,235. After a vacation here at Pimlico, "Big Pete," as they call him, will be shipped to Califofnia for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap—and a crack at Sun Beau's record of $376,744. The triumph ran his consecutive vicotries to six, gave him a record of nine firsts, two seconds, there thirds and one fourth in 15 starts this year. He holds the world record of 1.54 3-5 for today's distance, set October 10 at Keeneland, Ky.

First to Leave Gate

Though he has been at concert pitch since early last May, the big, docile son of Challenger carried a lusty appetite for running on to the track today. With Old Bill, his nuzzling lead horse, at his side, and the veteran JJockey Eddie Arcaro sitting on his gleaming back, Challedon walked benevolently to the starting gate, stood like a graven thing and was first out of the gate when Old Jim Milton rang the bell.

This was a surprise, for Challedon likes to lay abck and nail 'em on the last turn. But Georgie Woolf, upon Kayak II, had been instructed to let Challedon set the pace. And set it he did, with his easy, graceful lope. He led Kayak II by a length going into the first turn and half way down the backstretch—where Cravat began to realize his mistake in ever showing up.

Then the fireworks and a gasp from the crowd, for Kayak II, hit once on his dark rippling flanks by Woolf's whip, shot up even with Challedon and slowly but surely his bobbing neck swung ahead of Challedon—at the very spot on the old Pimlico track where Challedon broke Johnstown's heart to win the Preakness.

Responds to Whip

Now Kayak II was clearly ahead after he swept around on the outside and levelled out for the streak down the stretch. But "Big Pete" seemed to be just realizing that he was being pressed. A few quick bats from Arcaro's whip and he went to work.

Now Challedon was even again, and for perhaps an eighth of a mile they ran as if united in an invisible harness—two gleaming blues against the burnt-gold background of old Pimlico's trees.

But then there was no holding Challedon.

That "something extra" that is found in the purring machinery beneath his smooth hide, spoke its mind. He was in the groove—and for all his stout-hearted trying there wasn't anything that Kayak II could do to stave off the stretch burst of the champion.

. . . And at the Finish It's Challedon by a Half Length

Canzoneri Kayoed In Comeback Attempt

By the United Press

New York, Nov. 1.—The curtain came down on Tony Canzoneri's glorious ring career tonight when Referee Arthur Donovan halted his scheduled ten-round bout with Young Al Davis in the third round, before some 13,000 fans ta Madison Square Garden.

Donovan, humanely guarding the welfare of the former great champion, stopped the battle after 2:13 of the third session, giving Davis a technical knockout victory.

This action tagged the mauler of Mariboro with his first knockout—technical or otherwise — in more than 14 years of busy warfare.

CANZONERI

Canzoneri, realizing that Donovan was sending him into permanent retirement, as he rose from the canvas for the second time in that third round with blood streaming from his nose and mouth, tried to continue the battle, but handlers held him back.

In his dressing room, when Tony finally emerged from the punch-fog that the blows of young Davis had blown into his wind, he declared: "They shouldn't have stopped it. I wasn't warmed up yet. I've been down before, and got up to win."

Canzoneri sat there on a dressing room stool, bobbing and weaving, as his handlers tried to staunch the flow of blood from his lip and nostrils. He kept telling the newspapermen: "I'm not through yet. I could have licked him. They shouldn't have stopped it."

Hampden-Sydney Game Canceled

Hampden-Sydney, Va., Nov. 1 (AP). The football game between Hampden-Sydney College and Blue Ridge College, scheduled for Saturday, has been canceled by mutual agreement, Athletic Director Charles A. Bernier of Hampden-Sydney, announced today.

Oregon State Takes up Cry 'On to Rose Bowl'

Portland, Oreg., Nov. 1 (AP).—Undefeated and untied in five games this season, Oregon State College football players took up the cry "on to the Rose Bowl!" today as they prepared for their all-important clash at Portland Saturday with the powerful Southern California Trojans.

It looks from this distance that the winner of Saturday's game likely will get a bid to represent the West in the Pasadena pigskin classic New Year's Day, and the Beavers already are beginning to scent roses.

Oregon State will be on the short end of 3-to-1 odds, but the determined little squad has high hopes of knocking over the oncetied Trojans, defending champions of the Pacific Coast Conference and Rose Bowl victor last season.

Judge Landis In Hospital

Chicago, Nov. 1 (AP).—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, was a patient at Passavant Hospital today—but he wasn't worried about it. He is 72 years old.

Landis answered the telephone personally and said:

"They've got me for what they call a check-up. They have been looking at my interior—and say it looks about the way it always did. I'll be out in a few days. Goodbye!"

New Officers Nominated By D. W. G. A.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The nominating committee of the District Women's Golf Association named three new officers for the 1940 slate but re-nominated Mrs. Robert A. Lacey and Mrs. Gale E. Pugh as president and vice president, respectively, in a meeting yesterday.

The meeting was held in the home of Mrs. J. C. Dale, chairman of the group, who announced the results. Other members of the committee appointed to the board, included Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor; Mrs. R. E. Hotze, Washington; Mrs. V. P. Simmons, Congressional and Mrs. H. W. Sharpe, Indian Spring.

Mrs. Coolican Honored

Mrs. Oscar Coolican, Chevy Chase, District team captain last year, was named to the second vice president's post, replacing Mrs. George C. Roney, Washington Golf and Country Club.

Mrs. P. J. Winkler, Congressional, was named to th etreasurer's office, replacing Mrs. Theodore Peyser, Woodmont, who served three years under Mrs. Ralph W. Payne and last year under Mrs. Lacey. Mrs. Winkler was assistant handicap chairman last year.

The nomination of Mrs. R. L. Hutchison, Washington, to the position of secretary was somewhat of a surprise, as Mrs. Hutchison has held a handicap card only two years. She has been active in club affairs, however, and was highly recommended by her fellow members at Washington.

Mrs. Lacey, eighth president of the organization since its origin in 1923, will be elected at the annual meeting December 7 at Columbia Country Club. Nomination is tantamount to election for all officers.

Mrs. Lacey is a member of Columbia Club and Mrs. Pugh, winner of the Keefer Cup last year, a member

Howard Colt Is Given Merciful Death

By the United Press

New York, Nov. 1.—Sorteado, the dark chestnut colt brought from South America by C. S. Howard, was put to death mercifully na dswiftly today when doctors dispaired of saving the horse's injured foreleg.

"If wtiere a man, we would amputate," said Dr. N. F. Southard, insurance company physician, who witnessed the destruction, "but you can't amputate a horse's leg. The other leg cannot carry the weight and soon would break down."

The Argentine's charger's promising career was cut short on October 12 when he pulled up lame while running in the $10,000 Gallant Fox handicap at Jamaica. At first it was thought Sorteado had snapped a ligament in his right foreleg, and that he could be saved for stud. But X-rays showed a snapped sesamoid bone. Instead of knitting together, the bones began separating further each day, and a postmortem today showed a large piece of flesh had come between the parted segments.

Had Great Future

Only two weeks before the injury Howard's $40,000 importation had set a new North American record for a mile and a half by winning the Manhattan handicap at Belmont Park in 2:28 2-5, and apparently was sound as a dollar. Sorteado seemed destined to go on to overshadow his South American stablemate, Kayak II.

Th colt had run 11 previous races in this country, winning two and earning $20,000.

Attended 24 hours a day by his exercise boy, Jack Roebuck, Sorteado was made as comfortable as possible until the end. He could bear no weight on the injured foot and spent most of the time lying on the thick hay in his stall. Roebuck, who had been with the horse since he arrived in this country a year ago, gave his charge a last meal of corn, bran and oat mash shortly afternoon; and Sorzeado was still muncing away when Howard's veterinarian, Dr. F. C. Beller, arrived.

"That's right," Beller said, "never

Challedon Victory Makes Schaefer 'Forget' His Limp

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Nov. 1.—Challedon is just what the doctors ordered for Trainer Lou Schaefer—his victory in the Pimlico Special made Lou forget his sciatica.

SCHAEFER

Before the race Lou was limping froma knife-like pain in his back and leg—a pain accentuated by the fact that Challedon playfully kicked him in the shins the other day.

"Watching Pete run made me forget all about it for a while," Lou said. "I was so proud of him that I didn't feel any pain."

To Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Brann, owners of the big bay colt raised on their Walkersville farm, the victory was as sweet as the champagne that was served out of the Maryland Jockey Club Gold Cup at Barn No. 1.

In the clubhouse before the race, Mrs. Brann refused to look at the cup. She said she was afraid it would be bad luck. But Challedon won it for her.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 1.—The cheers this afternoon were for Challedon, the local bay who made good in Pimlico's "Horse-of-the-Year Stake." And in the reflected glory of the Maryland colt, owner, trainer and jockey beamed as Challedon came back to the finish line to get his floral wreath. It was a happy group that gathered in the winner's circle.

POVICH

But happier still was a white-mustached old gentleman who sat placidly in the grandstand beholding it all with silent satisfaction. Seventy-six-year-old Chris Fitzgerald wasn't invited to the winner's circle. But he belonged there. More than owner, trainer or jockey, the patriarchal Mr. Fitzgerald brought about today a triumph of a Maryland-bred in the most coveted victory of the year.

Twenty thousand Pimlico fans saw the long-striding champion run a champion's race to beat Kayak II and thrilled to the spectacle of Challedon's game finish, but the venerable Mr. Fitzgerald was seeing in his mind's eye not Challedon but another horse.

English Horse Bequeaths Own Greatness

Mr. Fitzgerald was seeing in Challedon merely the son of his daddy, the British horse Challenger II. To him, it was such a race as Challenger II would have run, for the English horse had bequeathed to Challedon his own greatness. At least that is what the white-mustached old gentleman in the stands could be pardoned for believing. To him it was a triumph of blood lines.

To Mr. Fitzgerald, Maryland owes its Challedon. Nine years ago in England, Mr. Fitzgerald made the decision that ultimately brought Challedon to racing. Long nights of study of blood lines, long afternoons spent at the tracks of England and the continent prefaced the deal that brought Challedon's daddy to America.

"I was commissioned to buy a race horse for Mr. William L. Brann and Mr. Robert S. Castle in 1930," Mr. Fitzgerald related before the race today. "They told me to go to England and study Europe's finest stock. The price was no object, they said. I could go as high as $150,000.

"There was only one consideration. I had to buy with an eye to breeding as well as racing. They wanted to start Branncastle Stable and my purchase would be the head of their string, to be retired for stud duty at the finish of his racing days.

Long Wait Before $50,000 Purchase Was Justified

"I saw every good race horse in England, Ireland and France, and the best horse I saw was Challenger II. He had quality written on him. When he won the Richmond Stake by a short head and showed his gameness, it made up my mind. I got him for £10,000 at a private sale."

As Challendon went to the post this afternoon, Mr. Fitzgerald gazed raptly at the son of Challenger II. "There is plenty of his daddy in him," he said. "Those straight hind legs and that nice manner. You could pull hairs from his pappy's tail while he was at the post and he wouldn't act up. Challedon's the sensible kind, too.

"He has quality like his daddy. A better looking head, if anything, I'd say. His ears are more alert. That was the only thing I could say against Challenger II. He had one lop-ear."

For Mr. Fitzgerald, it was a long wait before Challenger II justified the $50,000 purchase price. Eight years, to be exact, or until the horse sired in Challedon the winner of the Pimlico Futurity last summer. Challenger II had to justify Mr. Fitzgerald as a stud horse, because an accident removed him from the tracks shortly after his purchase by the Americans.

The Messers. Brann and Castle had ordered Fitzgerald to bring the British colt to America in 1930 at the peak of his 3-year-old form after an unbeaten 2-year-old career. But the horse that Fitzgerald placed on a transatlantic steamer was a cripple. The horse he delivered to the buyers was no longer fit for racing.

"Challedon Honored His Daddy"

A few weeks before shipment to America, a freak accident overtook the British champion. As he was being led back to his barn after a workout, a bird suddenly fluttered out of a tree and frightened the horse. Challenger II in his panic backed against a hedge bounded with barbed wire. Before he could extricate himself, he suffered a severely gashed left hind hock. It was the virtual end of his racing career.

Those years in the stud before Challenger II produced Challedon were long ones for Fitzgerald. The early crop of Challenger II foals did not distinguish themselves, and there was a suspicion that the British horse was a flop. And then, along came Challedon to win the Futurity, the Preakness, the Arlington Classic, to set the world record for a mile and three-sixteenths and today to win the Pimlico Special.

"But that race today was probably his greatest," related Mr. Fitzgerald, as a police escort led Challedon back to his barn. "We always knew he could come from behind. But today he sat the pace. He ran Kayak II's race and beat the Argentine at his own game. When Arcaro had to shake him up in the stretch, he found a lot of horse under him.

"The horse I saw win this race today might have been named Challedon but to me he looked suspiciously like Challenger II. A great daddy was being honored."

Clemson Alumni Dance Slated Tonight

Clemson's McFadden Is Point of Intensive G. W. Workout

Star Back Is Definite Starter

Colonial Air Attack, Defense Stressed in Long, Strenuous Drill

Coach Bill Reinhart's answer to the Clemson announcement yesterday that Banks McFadden, crack halfback, definitely will play here Friday night against G. W. was the Colonial's most strenuous workout in two weeks on the polo field. The change in weather gave Reinhart the opportunity he wanted to sharpen the George Washington attack, particularly in the air, and to set up a defense for Clemson's galloping, wide open offensive.

Colonial coaches feel that Clemson's attack, with its quick-opening plunges, its delayed bucks and wide sweeps, coupled with a tricky forward and lateral passing offensive, will be more difficult to control than Georgetown's. In McFadden and Shad Bryant, the "Mutt and Jeff" combine of the South Carolina forces, Coach Jess Neely has an ideal pair of backs to operate his swift-moving plays.

Banks Forecasts Trouble

The statement that McFadden is ready to play increases the Colonial's load. Coach Neely used Chippy Maness in McFadden's place against Navy and there was no apparent lessening in the Bengal's drive. But McFadden is a slightly built speedster, who is a touchdown threat every time he packs the ball. And he is a brilliant passer, with a high percentage of completions and only one interception chalked against him in two seasons.

In spite of Clemson's high-geared performances of late, there is the feeling in the G. W. camp that the Colonials will match almost any line they meet if the standard of the Georgetown game can be maintained. In that battle, the fast-charging Colonial forwards choked off many ambitious plays before they got under way. This fine line play was supported by alert, fast pass defensive work by Mike Monchlovich, the burly sophomore center who backed up the line, and Murphy Booth and Sam Babich, defensive halfbacks.

No Letdown Seen

The Colonials have bounced back nicely after the Georgetown contest. There are no signs of the letdown which frequently follows an important local game of this kind. In fact, with an open date next week, G. W. coaches are pushing the squad at a fast clip for Clemson, promising a well earned rest after this game.

Reinhart devoted much of yesterday's session to a report on the activities of McFadden, who stands 6 feet 3 inches, and Bryant, the "Jeff" of the combination, who is 5 feet 9. He recalled with a vivid description McFadden's 68-yard touchdown run against George Washington on the first play of last year's game. He also embarrassed some of the veterans by explaining how McFadden and Bryant worked a lateral pass, with Bryant on the receiving end, that resulted in a 70-yard touchdown dash.

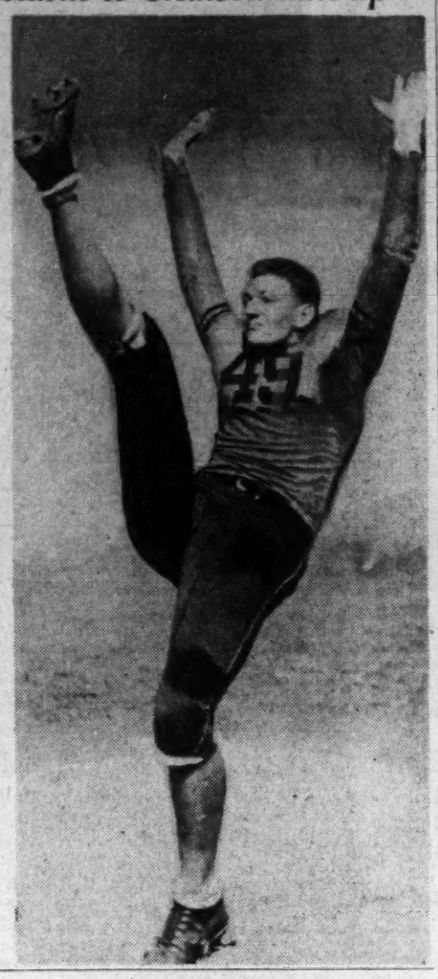
"Stop 'Em Early"

"Most of you know just how well Clemson executes its plays," Reinhart said, finishing his address to the squad, "and the only way to stop them is to play them like you played the Georgetown spread plays—stop 'em before they get started."

McFadden's record this year is truly remarkable. He has carried the ball 43 times for 303 yards' gain, an average of about 7 yards on each attempt. He has completed 20 out of 36 passes and the Tigers have advanced 355 yards on these completions. He scored once on a 90-yard run, and lesser dashes into pay-dirt territory have become commonplace with this lanky lad from Great Falls, S. C.

His ball-handling is a thing of beauty, probably because he is a great basketball player. He was selected on the All-America cage team last year, in fact.

Star Returns to Clemson Line-up



Banks McFadden, Clemson's versatile halfback, will be on the scene here Friday night to menace the George Washington squad, it was announced yesterday at Clemson, S. C. McFadden has recovered from an ankle infection which kept him out of the Navy game and Coach Jess Neely expects to have his ace in good shape. McFadden is a triple-threater, whose punts, passes and runs are likely to keep the Colonials on edge all evening

Ace Parker Leads Pro League In Number of Passes Completed

By the Associated Press

New York, No. 1.—Three Brooklyn Dodger performers have taken over leading positions in the individual statistics of the National Professional Football League, according to the latest figures released today.

Ace Parker has supplanted Parker Hall, Cleveland Rams "freshman," as the No. 1 passer. The Dodger ace stands second in completions, with 46 to Hall's 57; is second to Frank Filchock, of the Washington Redskins in efficiency with an average of 48 per cent, on 46 complete in 94 tries, and is tops in yardage gained on his passes, with 748.

Brooklyn's other pace-setters are veteran Ralph Kercheval and End Perry Schwartz. Kercheval, who kicked two field goals against the New York Giants last Sunday, leads the league with six, one more than the total which gave him the title last year, and Schwartz has caught 20 passes for 392 yards.

Central Club Is Certain It Will Beat Tech

No Injuries Mark Mt. Pleasant Eleven As Rivalry Nears

If pre-game confidence, fire and high spirits have anything to do with it, Central might just as well send its football team to a movie Friday afternoon and automatically chalk up a 30-0—or thereabouts—victory over Tech, its ancient rival.

To hear the Mount Pleasanters tell it, a plague is the least it would take to cause a loss. Every man is in top shape, including Johnny Bredbenner, the spindly youngster who missed several games because of an injury. And every man "knows" the club will repeat or better its 27-6 triumph of 1938.

Naturally, there's a pessimist in the crowd. He's Coach Hardy Pierce, whose job it is to see the Blue and White gladiators don't become overconfident. His pessimism took the form of a beautiful smile yesterday as he observed his inter-high champions in mild action in their first full day's work out of doors this week.

"One touchdown," he intoned. "Give me a one-touchdown lead at the start of the game and I'll guarantee they will never catch us. How will we score? They say Tech's forward wall will stop us, but I think Central will score at least once through it. The other points—if there are any—might be made in the air and again they might not."

That the aerial attack is not being neglected was indicated by the fact that all of Central's passers sharpened their aims yesterday. Benny Steiner, head of that department and most others and a 60-minute man if there ever was one, practiced passing, kicking and his latest specialty, drop-kicking. Bredbenner, Dick Farr, Harry Martin and Jim Porter also contributed to the aerial barrage, and Farr, a brilliant end, improved his punting with numerous long ones.

8 Major Games Face Rams in 1940

New York, Nov. 1 (AP).—Fordham's football team will play a schedule of eight major games next fall, it was announced today by Graduate Manager John F. Coffey. Arkansas of the Southwest Conference, to be met on Thanksgiving Day, November 21, will be the only new opponent. The Rams' lone road game will be at Pittsburgh November 19 against the Panthers.

The schedule:

November 2, North Carolina; 9, Purdue; 21, Arkansas; 30, New York U.

Razzle-Dazzle Defense Work Occupies C. U.

Cardinals Nonchalant As Work for Tulsa Game Saturday Proceeds

Despite an undefeated record of five straight games, enough cause for a lot of trembling on the part of their admirers, Catholic University's burly football lads yesterday went unconcernedly about preparations for their Saturday clash with Tulsa U. A stiff workout out-of-doors accentuated defense for various razzle-dazzle plays, which type seems to be that featured by the Golden Hurricane.

Coach Dutch Bergman was limited in his drills due to the fact he has not scouted Tulsa and reports from the Southwestern stronghold have been all too meager. Last week the Hurricane was trounced by Detroit, 16-7, though both the winner's touchdowns were the results of blocked kicks. With such dependables as Roy Buffalo, Lee Gentry and Joe Gibson in the backfield, Tulsa completed 9 out of 19 aerials. It was the second loss in five games, the only other being a 9-7 setback at the hands of Oklahoma A. and M.

The invading Tulsans, three full teams of them, left last night and are expected in Washington early tomorrow morning. Confidence was high that the club would upset C. U., ending its undefeated and untied streak as well as hopes for a "Bowl" bid at the same time.

Daniels, Cocimskey To Fight Nov. 9

Maynard Daniels, 19-year-old Marine Reserve heavyweight, whose wild-swinging knockout victories in the Washington ring last summer branded him as a likely prospect, will meet the most severe test of his career November 9 when he will fight Pat Comiskey, of New York, in Baltimore.

Daniels, unbeaten locally and in Baltimore, has run up a string of five knockouts—two in Baltimore—over such "competition" as Jim Wilson, Jake Friedman and Johnny Kapovich.

Comiskey, generally conceded the title of heavyweight "white hope," is a 19-year-old puncher who seems to be on his way to big things in the fight business. If Daniels can get by Comiskey, who carries a potent right hand and a highly dangerous left, he will be "in the chips" henceforth, as the fight parlance has it.

Craft Under Knife

Waterloo, Iowa, Nov. 1 (AP).—Harry Craft, Cincinnati Reds' outfielder, had his tonsils removed at a hospital here today. He had been advised to have the operation because of throat trouble during the 1939 baseball season.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Baltimore, Nov. 1.—All horse players die broke, but some must die happy too. You see those ancient guys at every track, particularly around these parts—frail, doddering old bloods, with the pale memory of good living in their cheeks and the gouty stare of old thoroughbred fanciers in their eyes.

CONSIDINE

The way they keep coming to the horse parks makes you think that compassionate providence has given them some good feed-box dope just when they are going to be transported away—so they can have time to get out to the track to make one last bet, and thrill for one final time at the sight of the necklace of color that is a field coming into the stretch.

We know one confirmed horseman who must have died happy. He was old Maj. Ral Parr, who passed along here in Baltimore about a fortnight ago. He was a fine looking man, with a crown of gray hair, a ruddy face and a feeling for the little niceties that mean so much to the horse people. His tastes ran to Magenta sports coats, and when young Al Vanderbilt threw a rough and tumble dance at the Fifth Regiment Armory after one of the Preaknesses, Parr came in the pink coat of an old landed squire.

He had some pretty good horses in his day. But his great passion in life was his love of what was called "condition books." The old man was never without one, collected them, memorized them happily.

But at last death caught up with him, as the trees were turning color in Maryland, the old gaffers who knew him down the years weren't particularly sad. They said that he had a faint kind of smile around the corners of his mouth.

He probably did—for when the undertaker dressed him in his last splendid suit, one of his old friends showed up and stuck a Pimlico condition book in old Parr's pocket.

Lou Schaefer, the little Idahoan who trains Challedon, has done a remarkable job of keeping Big Pete, as they call him around the bar, tightly wound for months.

He had him almost up to his peak form last May 6 for the Kentucky Derby. A week later he ran away with the Preakness. In mid-June he ran third in the Dwyer at Aqueduct, then a week later, third in the Kent Handicap at Delaware Park. By the Fourth of July he was at Suffolk Downs, winning the Yankee Handicap. A week later he ran fourth in the Massachusetts Handicap, the only time he has ever been out of the money.

Then, when Johnstown and the others began to fade, Challedon came on to win the Arlington classic July 22, and a month later finished second to Porter's Mite in the mile and an eighth Narragansett Handicap. Then a string of five victories, which kept him busy at Narragansett, Hawthorne, Havre de Grace, Keeneland and Laurel from September 2 until 10 days go. Now he'll get a brief rest and be shipped to the Coast—for the big sugar races like the $100,000 Santa Anita.

Illinois Football Star's Mother Dies

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 1 (AP).—Mel Brewer, star guard and captain of the University of Illinois football team, received word of the death of his mother today and left immediately for the family home at Carbondale. It was problematical whether he would play against Michigan next Saturday at Illinois.

Jockey Longden Rides Third Double of Empire City Meet

Boola Brook Wins Feature At Hilltop

Winner Pays 8-1; Kasidah, Meade Up, Breaks Last and Never Moves Up

By the Associated Press

Yonkers, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Johnny Longden, diminutive British veteran of the saddle, who is a distant second to Don Meade in the national standing, continued his consistently good riding at Empire City today. The little fellow, who has won one or more races on each of the nine days of the sport conducted here so far, bagged his third double of the hilltop session and his twelfth winner of the meeting when he guided Boola Brook first home in the Best Love Purse, fourth and most interesting event on the card.

Winner Pays 8 to 1

Boola Brook, flying the silks of H. F. Guggenheim's Falaise Stable, was an 8-to-1 shot despite her recent winning race. She stepped past the wire four lengths in advance of Wild Rose Farm's Pleione, a daughter of Bud Lerner, undefeated in her two outings prior to today. A. H. Rude's On Stage was headed out of the place.

Marshall Field's Kasidah, 2-to-1 choice under Don Meade, broke a poor last and never overtook a horse in the field of six 2-year-old fillies. Although the sun was shining at last, the track was heavy except on the extreme outside.

Three of the starters—Boola Brook, On Stage and Kasidah—are eligible for Saturday's $2,500 added, short six furlong Autumn Day stakes, for juvenile fillies.

Goes Distance in 1:09 4-5

Boola Brook covered that distance today in the smart time of 1:09 4-5.

Longden was wide awake at the post. He sent Boola Brook right to the front from the inside position and quickly guided his mount out from the deep going on the rail while allowing her to steal into several lengths advantage. There never was any doubt as to the result and Boola Brook just toyed with her rivals. Pleione held down second position all the way but just lasted to stave off On Stage.

Return of Spencer, Back, Gives Hoyas 'Punch' for W. Va.

Star Hurt In Temple Game Ready

Cracked Shoulder Is Healed After Rest; Mountaineers Boost Stock of Sam Pinion

The next best thing to Joe Mellendeck—his 1938 understudy—is once more in the Georgetown University line-up as the Hoyas prepare to take their undefeated-but-tied record of the last two years into their game with West Virginia Saturday at Griffith Stadium.

He's Jack Spencer, the 180-pound back who has been absent from Georgetown's grid efforts since the Temple game, when he suffered a cracked shoulder. His return a week ago boosted the Hoya's offensive threat about 50 per cent, though he was kept out of the G. W. engagement to allow the injured shoulder to heal completely.

A 5-foot-11 junior, Spencer goes through the full backfield repetoire with equal ease. He runs, passes and kicks, just as his talented lord, Mellendeck, did last year, and his presence is seen by observers as the scoring punch Georgetown has sadly needed all season. He'll probably be used sparingly against the Mountaineers, though more freely against Maryland and N. Y. U., Georgetown's final two foes.

Against this new threat of the Hoyas, West Virginia will throw its stellar huskies, Harry Clark, Charley Hockenberry and John Carliss, as well as the "Tom Thumb" of the outfit—little Sammy Pinion. His admirers call Pinion one of the most brilliant backs of his size in the country. He's 5-feet-5, weighs a mere 143 pounds, but triple-threats with the best of them.

Georgetown-West Virginia tickets are on sale at Griffith Stadium, Spaldings and the Hoya athletic office.

Sorteado Given Merciful Death

kill a man or a horse or a dog without a full stomach."

When Beller ordered Roebuck to lead Sorteado out in front of the stable, the boy pleaded: "Don't you wanna let him finish eatin' first, doc?"

But Beller didn't answer and tears came to the boy's eyes as he took Sorteado's halter down off a nail in the wall. As he led the horse from the stall, the sun broke out from behind the clouds, and the boy patted his nose and said, "Take a good look at it, this is your last chance."

Sorteado hobbled on his three good legs out in front of the long barn. Dr. Beller followed with his syringe of strychnine. A moment after the injection, Sorteado shuddered, fell to his knees and rolled over. The sun went back behind the clouds.

Infection Forming

After the post-mortem on the fetlock joint, Beller and Southard agreed that an infection would have set up within a few days that would have caused the horse terrific pain.

The day after Sorteado set the new 1½-mile record at Belmont, Howard turned down an opportunity to increase insurance on the horse to $50,000, and he carried only the $40,000 policy he took out with Lloyd's of London when he bought the son of Tresiete-Sentina in Buenos Aires two years ago. Sorteado had won $20,000 under the Howard colors.

of Manor. Mrs. Lacey was tournament committee chairman prior to her election last year when Mrs. R. W. Payne retired after three years as president. Mrs. Pugh was assistant handicap chairman.

The new officers will have the task of revising the entire system of play next year, when the major affairs will all be played over two courses, and other changes will be made.

Members of the executive committee and the other committees and captains will be made in meetings early next year.

Last season, under the leadership of Mrs. Lacey, Mrs. Pugh and the other officers, was the biggest in history in number of players, and was highly successful.

Gallagher Plans to Mix It With Simon

Marty Gallagher will change his style of hugging and leaning and will stand up and fight when he meets 240-pound Abe Simon, of New York, oMnday night in the ten-round headline match at Turner's Arena, he announced to one and all yesterday.

The Foggy Bottom warrior's decision to adopt a new fighting style came to him in his fight with Jim Robinson last summer, he insisted—this despite the fact he leaned on Robinson so much during the ten rounds that it appeared for a while that he might grow there as moss on a stone.

Marty did step back occasionally, however, and bang away at Robinson, and it was this style which flashed a message to him, he said.

"From now on I'm a puncher—I'm gonna do nothing but stand off and keep hitting this fellow Simon. In fact, that's the way I plan to fight hereafter, because it's the fighter who gets off first and keeps punching who wins," Marty informed.

The brawny 200-pound Irishman will be fighting an uphill battle against Simon, who came up under guidance of Artie McGovern, famed trainer of Gene Tunney. Simon has a fairly impressive record which includes knockouts over Roberto Roberti, Stanley Ketchell and Jack Torrance, who has since abandoned fighting. Then, too, he was knocked out by Buddy Baer in three rounds.

O'Conor, Ruth Dinner Guests

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hancock, Md., Nov. 1.—Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor and Babe Ruth, former baseball star, will be among the guests at the annual dinner of the Woodmont Rod and Gun Club near here November 14 on the eve of the hunting season.

This dinner has been an important prelude of the hunting season in western Maryland annually and attracts many distinguished guests. For 13 years Maryland Governors have attended this dinner, one of the rules of which is that no dinner coats be worn. The rule is enforced even when, as has happened on a number of occasions, the President of the United States was present.

Gov. O'Conor and Ruth will join with members and their guests on opening day of the hunting season in hunting wild turkeys, ducks, pheasants and other small game.

Pimlico Special Won by Challedon same instructions. On the trip down the straightaway to the clubhouse turn, the two rivals were under heavy wraps. Arcaro kept looking back, probably wondering why Woolf did not take the lead. Cravat, naturally, leacking early speed, already was some three lengths behind Kayak II.

The first quarter was run in 0:25 2-5. As the field swung into the backstretch, the same cautious riding prevailed. Arcaro had a strong grip on Challedon. Woolf had an equally strong grip on Kayak II. Basil James, on Cravat, was bobbling his mount along.

The half was run in :51 4-5—workout time at Charles Town. This was due to the continued careful riding. There was little change in the tactics of either Arcaro or Woolf until the leaders reached the 6-furlong pole. At this stage the time was 1:16 3-5, mediocre for a three-quarter race at Marlboro in the mud.

However, approaching the far turn things began to happen, despite the fact that Challedon was being kept in the middle of the track to take advantage of the better going. Woolf began putting Kayak II to a drive and on the outside.

It was there that the Challedon rooters began to doubt their champion. Kayak II gained momentum. Was it another Seabiscuit race? Was the West Coast star, with the South American ways, going to circle Challedon and leave the Marylander tied to the eighth pole as did the son of Hard Tack? Kayak II went on. The tip of his nose in front midway of the swing to the stretch. Then his head was in front of Challedon. Then his full neck was showing.

The two, fighting for all they were worth, straightened out in the stretch. Woolf, on Kayak II, went to the whip. Arcaro, on Challedon, went to the whip. It was anybody's race, anybody's but Cravat's because he was fading farther and farther back.

Arcaro put away his whip. He had given Challedon the signal. Kayak II was still in front by a head. In midstretch, Kayak II still had the advantage.

Then, with the "C. and H." already erased from his title of 1939 champion, Challedon appeared to catch the spirit of the race. He stuck out his head a little farther. He added more cadence to his digging strides. On and on they came. Fighting, fighting for these precious inches. Gradually at first, then abruptly, Challedon began to draw out—a head, a neck. Woolf drove Kayak II as if his very position in eternity depended on the outcome. Arcaro kept pumping as if he were in a lifeboa tfilled to the gunwale with the water of the sea. It was thus they went over the line. It was Challedon, mighty Challedon, by a half-length.

There's a great horse for you!

Injured Princeton Gridder May Have Leg Amputated

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 1 (AP).—Amputation of the left leg of Donald G. Herring, 21, first-string right tackle on the Princeton football team, as the result of an injury suffered in the first minute of the Brown game last Saturday, became a possibility today.

Dr. Ralph J. Belford, staff surgeon at Princeton Hospital, said tonight "a decision has not yet been made." He explained that the injury had been more serious than the dislocation first observed, nerves and blood vessels having suffered.

Standing 6 feet and 4 inches tall and weighing 237 pounds, Herring, a junior, holds the university record for throwing the discuss, 156 feet 2½ inches.

Terror, Hader Renew Old Mat Feud

A vague Hallowe'en motif will prevail tonight at Turner's Arena when the Golden Terror, gold and black hooded wrestling gentleman, meets Jack Hader in the main affair.

The Terror, who seeks to hide his identity by wearing an enveloping suit of wool, was called in to renew his slightly stale feud with Hader as a sort of belated Hallowe'en celebration, Promoter Joe Turner insisted yesterday.

Hader has taken the usual vows to unmask The Terror, generally known as Roy Weatherly, but not much is expected to come of it.

The fun begins at 8:30 p. m. with Alan Eustace introducing his new facial contortions to Hans Kampfer. Other groan exhibitions will be provided by Abie Coleman and Steve Bartes, John Katan and Ed Newman, Louis Bacigalupi and Rudy Strongberg.

Virginia Beats Frosh, Using Chicago Plays

? Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 1 (AP).—Virginia's Cavaliers mowed down a freshman team using Chicago's defense in a practice session today as the squad prepared for Saturday's battle with the Illinois team. The Cavaliers gave their best exhibition of blocking of the season.

The long scrimmage was highlighted by the open field sprints of Mosby Cardozo, and the power drives of Leroy Neustedter and Bob Lama.

Terps Prepare For Penn State Game Saturday

Injury Jinx Hounds Maryland; Dobson Bans Scrimmage

Whatever rough work Maryland University gridders are allowed this week will be confined to their clash Saturday afternoon with Penn State at State College, Pa., it was indicated yesterday when, after a two-day layoff, Coach Frank Dobson sent his Terrapins through a long but scrimmageless drill.

The reason, of course, is the injury "bug" which has continually hounded Terp footballers this year. Mearle DuVall, ace passer and runner, for the second straight week is on the sick list, and Pershing Mondorff is just now rounding into shape. The latter will be in the lineup Saturday, his injured arm once again permitting him to carry part of the passing burden that fell solely on young Joe Murphy as the Terps were flattened, 14-0, by Florida last week. DuVall will be kept out of the Penn State fracas to allow his wounds to heal completely for the Georgetown game.

The Nittany Lions, meanwhile, sent word that their club was in perfect shape and anxious for action after a 6-6 deadlock with Syracuse. The only lineup change expected is in the right halfback spot, where Soph Len Krouse will take over the duties of veteran "Chuck" Peters.

Maryland Jayvees will also see action this week-end. Under Assistant Coach Jack Faber they square off against Penn Jayvees tomorrow in Philadelphia, later going to State College to join the varsity. Last year's clash between the two junior varsities ended in a 6-6 tie.

Penn State Ready For Terp Game

State College, Pa., Nov. 1 (AP).—Penn State's football team, which went through the Syracuse game without injury, is expected to be in its best physical condition of the season for Saturday's game with the University of Maryland. Only one line-up change, replacement of sophomore Len Krouse by the veteran Chuck Peters at right halfback, is contemplated by Coach Bob Higgins.

Another 'Farm' Club

Pittsburgh, Nov. 1 (AP).—Another definite step toward improving the already extensive but still growing farm system of the Pittsburgh Pirates came today with announcement of outright purchase of the Western Association Club at Hutchinson, Kans., for an unannounced price. For some time the Bucs have confined relations with minor league clubs to working agreements.

Three Out-of-Town Players in Pro-Senior Golf Today

Oliver, Thorn And Burton In Pairings

Cox and Hawley Team to Beat In Tournament At Chevy Chase Club

Three out-of-town professionals are included in the field of 16 teams in Bob Barnett's annual pro-senior tournament today at Chevy Chase. The pros play with senior members of the host club.

Ed Oliver, Hornel, N. Y.; Arthur Thorn, Lancaster, Pa., and Danny Burton, Quantico, Va., mentors, were included in the pairings announced last night by Barnett.

Three team prizes will be awarded, to the combined totals of the pros' individual score and the seniors' score, minus his club handicap. The lowest pro score out of the money and the lowest senior net total, out of the money, will also be rewarded.

The team to beat appears to be Wiffy Cox, Congressional pro, and C. B. Hawley, whose four handicap is the lowest of the senior players. Oliver and Dr. L. B. T. Johnson won the event last year, Oliver breaking the course record with a 67 his first trip around the layout.

Virginia Tech Eleven Plays Touted Furman Next Saturday

Purple Hurricane Boasts One of Best Football Records in South This Season

Special Dispatch to The Post

Blacksburg, Va., Nov. 1.—They outranked, outpassed and outpunted the Army; they soundly whipped a strong Georgia team, 20 to 0, and made it look easy; they sandwiched easy wins over Erskine, The Citadel and Davidson. So Virginia Tech's football forces face anything but a tea party in Miles Stadium here Saturday, when they come to grips with Furman in Tech's last home game of the season.

The Purple Hurricane from Greenville, N. C., living up to its name this fall, will whirl into Miles Stadium boasting one of the best football records in the South. Only Army has trimmed the Hurricane, which has run up 72 points to 22 for their opponents. Against Southern foes the Palmetto State boys have scored 56 points while yielding only 6.

Against Coach Diz McLeod's fast-stepping array—a team which Tech believes will be the most potent football machine to play Miles Stadium since Carolina's Tarheels appeared here in 1930—the Techmen will hurl Tex Tilson's sturdy line an array of backs that hasn't yet quite matched the brilliance of the Furman foursome. Aces of the Purple backfield are Roten Shetley, a 200-pound senior fullback, and Pepper Martin, 165-pound ball of fire, at halfback.

Coach G. F. (Red) Laird, who has twice scouted the Hurricane this fall, terms Furman "the best team I have seen all year with exception of North Carolina." Laird is also high in his praise of Roten Shetley. This big fellow may prove himself the finest fullback who has stepped on Virginia turf the entire season. Coach Laird frankly states that he has not seen Shetley's equal at fullback in years. He is a 200 pounder who runs the dashes on the track team and hits with terrific power and fine agility.

English Voted Most Valuable

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Nov. 1.—Gilbert English, versatile third baseman for the St. Paul Saints, today was selected the most valuable player in the American Association for 1939 by the Sporting News, national baseball weekly.

The selection was made after a poll of official scorers of the association. English received 91 points out of a possible 144. Pitcher Herb Hash, of Minneapolis, was runner-up with 71 points, and Vince DiMaggio, Kansas City outfielder, was third with 70 points.

Listing their reasons for conferring the award on English, scorers cited his .343 batting average, his 172 base hits, 35 doubles, 7 triples, 19 home runs and 91 runs batted in as well as his sparkling fielding and defensive play.

The remainder of the first ten players listed included Harold Reese, Louisville shortstop, 62; Gerald Priddy, Kansas City second baseman, 54; James Pofahl, Minneapolis shortstop (now the property of Washington), 40; John Hill, Milwaukee third baseman, 34; Bill Baker, Indianapolis catcher, 25; Nate Andrews, Columbus pitcher, 23, and Jess Newman, Indianapolis outfielder, 14.

Detroit, Chicago Open Hockey Season Tonight

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 1.—A revamped gang of Detroit Redwings and a Chicago Blackhawk team starting its first full season under the management of Paul Thompson will open the 1939-1940 National Hockey League campaign tomorrow night at Chicago. But it will be another week before all seven teams have seen action.

The Redwings, who have let go Doug Young and Marty Barry and acquired Cecil Dillon from the New York Rangers, will present a lineup made up partly of veterans and partly of youngsters. Among the standbys will be Tiny Thompson, in goal; Ebbie Goodfellow and Scotty Bowman, on defense, and Syd Howe, at left wing. The recruits, some of them with major-league experience, include Conny Brown, Buck Jones and Kenny Kilrea, as well as Gus Giesebrecht, one of last year's best rookies.

P. G. A. Senior Event Moved To Sarasota

Fred McLeod, Pro At Columbia, Will Defend Title Jan. 12-14

Fred McLeod, Columbia's veteran professional who won the National P. G. A. Senior's championship last year, 30 years after his Open triumph, will defend his title January 12-14 at Sarasota, Florida, according to the P. G. A. magazine.

The tournament was moved from Augusta to the Bobby Jones Club where National P. G. A. President George Jacobus is winter professional. The date is also a month and a half later, reasons being the pros had to return to their clubs from the early date, and also inclement weather marred the tourney on both occasions.

The Senior's meeting will be held the first night of the tournament, January 12. The Sarasota Chamber of Commerce will arrange fishing trips and other entertainment for the pros, P. G. A. members 50 years of age and over.

The tournament is 54-holes medal play, but the low scorer in age groups of 50 to 54, 55 to 60, and 60 and over, but the low scorer of the 3-day play will be the champion. McLeod competes in the 55 to 60 class. He won the event last year after a playoff.

Jock Hutchinson was the first senior's champ, with McLeod losing in a playoff with Dave Ogilvie for top money in the 55 to 60 class. Hutchinson will be McLeod's most servious rival for a retention of his title.

The purse will be around the $2,000 mark, with a field of 50 expected.

Wake Forest Preps For Marshall Game Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Wake Forest, N. C., Nov. 1.—Coach Peahead Walker's fighting Deacons, dismayed but unbowed after their 6-0 defeat at the hands of Duke's badly outplayed Blue Devils last Saturday, are now turning their attention to their coming encounter with Marshall College's Big Greens Saturday of this week at Huntington, W. Va.

The Big Greens, tutored by Crafty Cam Henderson, have been beaten but once this year, dropping an unlucky 20-0 decision to the undefeated Scranton University eleven last Saturday. That contest was played in a heavy downfall of snow on a field already soaked with rain, which made both clubs' ball handling almost impossible, and led to Marshall's defeat when the Scranton boys blocked two of their 15 punts for touchdowns.

Trailing 13 points, going into the second half, the Greens tossed a desperate pass that sailed into the waiting hands of a Scranton halfback, yielding the winners their final marker. Neither ball club could do anything on the ground plays, and it was these three breaks that turned an otherwise even ball game into a one-sided victory.

Mrs. Perry's 5-Year-Old Gelding Ridden by Owner in Hunter Event

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 1.—Flicker, 5-year-old brown gelding which annexed the championship at the Frekericksburg Horse Show, was piloted to victory by his owner, Mrs. W. Haggin Perry, of Keswick, in the class for green hunters opening event at the annual trials of the Keswick Hunt Club, staged this afternoon at Tall Oaks, home of Mrs. John M.Hopkins, near Keswick. Nineteen horses competed for the trophy.

The event for thoroughbred hunters was won by Grenadier Guard, owned by Mrs. J. P. Jones, joint master of the Farmington Hunt, and second was Overcome, from the same stables. Another entry in this class was Vis Major, a brown gelding owned and ridden by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr.

The trophy in the class for half-bred hunters went to Mrs. W. Haggin Perry's bay gelding, Opening Meet, by Night Wing. Mrs. Perry's 7-year-old bay gelding, weather permitting, annexed first money in the Corinthian Stake class, in which the horses entered must have been hunted at least six times during the 1938-1939 season. Second was the chestnut gelding, Lord Benton, by Sir Martin, from the same stables.

Wood, Navy Back, Returns to Lineup

High Scoring Star, Who Was Hurt In Dartmouth Game, Probably Won't See Action in Penn Tilt Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Nov. 1.—Maj. Swede Larson, head coach, was happily surprised this afternoon when he reached the field and saw the ack of a sturdy lad with a big "27" on it, for the wearer was Emmett (Doc) Wood, the Navy's high-scoring backfield man who was hurt in the Dartmouth game,and whose presence today was entirely unexpecte.

Wood was a hospital patient until about noon today, and only this morning. Maj. Larson had been given a rather unfavorable report as to his chunky halfback which increased his surprise at seeing him on the field.

Wood, of course, worked moderately this afternoon, but he did not get along badly at all. The bruised cartilag in his knee has healed to the extent that there is little limp, and he was able to make a lap around the field and did a lot of passing and went through a few formations. There is no chance that he will be used against Penn Saturday, but may get in the Columbia game, a week later.

Sherwood Werner, another injured back, returned to the field this afternoon. On the other side of the ledger, was an injury to Al Feldmeier, who had been slated to start at right guard Saturday, largely on account of his blocking ability. Feldmeier has a bruised hip and may not play. His place would be taken by Bex Trimble, who has played there most of the season.

The four changes in the line cut the average from about 205 pounds to about 187, the substitution of Foster for Hansen, making a difference of 65 pounds.

The probable starting backfield will be Cliff Lenz, Monty Whitehead, Pat Gray and Harold Hansen. Hansen's shift to the backfield was primarily for his ability on pass defense, which he demonstrated last year against the passing of the great Syd Luckman, of Columbia. On the other hand, the Navy has been weak in this department during the whole season.

An alternate backfield is made up of Bob Leonard, Lou Mayo, Ralph Boyer and Everett Malcolm, with such backs as Wesley Gebert, Earl Rowse, Charley Beers and Ed Gillette still in reserve.

To Our Representatives

STOP THE WAR NOW!

You are called upon to make history today. The World is breathlessly awaiting the outcome of your deliberations. Your names will be recorded on the scroll of time through the ages for the generations to come.

The Senate, last week, insisted on lifting the embargo on poison gas, flame-throwers and other death and horror-dealing implements. Do not repeat their tragic error.

You are to decide the fate (of life, or death, or worse) of 20,000,000 of the flower of American youth within the next few hours.

The American mothers rely on you. Save our youth from future agony. LET US REMIND YOU OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S WORDS: "If war should break out again in another continent—let us not blink the fact that we would find in this country thousands of Americans who, seeking immediate riches—fool's gold—would attempt to break down or evade our neutrality. They would tell you—and, unfortunately, their views would get wide publicity—* * * that America once more would capture the trade of the world. It would be hard to resist the clamor of that greed. If we face the choice of profits or peace, the Nation will answer—must answer—'WE CHOOSE PEACE'."

Roosevelt Sees Continuance of Trade Upturn

Pay Roll Rise Effect To Be Felt in 1940, He Tells Writer

Merryle Stanley Rukeyser, economic commentator for International News Service, after a visit at the White House, reflects in the following exclusive dispatch President Roosevelt's expectation of continued recovery in the United States.

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser.
International News Service Staff Writer

President Roosevelt confidently expects that the current upswing in American business and employment has sufficient momentum and robustness to carry over into 1940.

RUKEYSER

In taking this view, the Chief Executive differs from some Government economists and others who have been predicting a setback in the recovery movement after the turn of the war.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Roosevelt holds that the impact of re-employment of recent months won't be fully reflected in consumer buying until January and February.

Mr. Roosevelt's expectations are based on his observation through the years of the normal sequence of events in business. It is his impression that there is a time lag which delays the bringing of benefits to retail stores of increased payrolls in factories.

Debts to Be Paid

His explanation of this process lies in the fact that the typical American is honest, and is inclined in the first few months of increased contents in pay envelopes to use the augmented funds to pay debts rather than to add new items to the family budget.

With the feeling that the big upswing in industry got under way around mid-August, the President senses that the Nation is still in the phase of paying off debts at the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker.

As housewives take advantage of breadwinners' improved situation to square accounts at the local stores, the merchants, in turn, use the proceeds to reduce their accounts payable to their suppliers. Thus the President regards this early stage of economic recovery as a clearing of the decks for action later.

President Roosevelt thinks that Mr. Average American will have made perceptible progress by the turn of the year in paying off debts, and then will be in a mood to buy a fur neckpiece for the little woman.

Sees Better Yule Trade

Of course, the President knows that, if his expectations are fulfilled, they will have to be re-expressed in terms of seasonal variations: Mr. Roosevelt expects some improvement in the Christmas trade, but thinks that the full release of pay rolls for current buying of new things may be anticipated in January and February.

In regard to price policy, the Chief Executive seems pleased with the forbearance shown since the outbreak of war in Europe by American manufacturers of finished goods. They have not marked up prices in accordance with the rise in raw material quotations. Mr. Roosevelt is inclined to believe that, from the standpoint of a healthily functioning national economy, a further price rise except for agricultural products should not be encouraged.

Such advance as has already taken place in raw material prices, he feels, has been helpful to trade in closing the business deterring price gaps which previously made finished goods disproportionately high in price to the level of raw material quotations. Narrowing of price gaps in effect adds to the purchasing power of the millions of Americans who are dependent for income on the mines, quarries and on agriculture.

Reports have been reaching the White House of a shortage of machinists and other types of skilled workers in some sections, but the President is inclined to feel that industry will be resourceful enough to meet such increased demand as may materialize in spite of this handicap.

Losses Replace Opening Bulge in Wheat Futures

Chicago, Nov. 1 (AP).—An opening bulge of about ⅜ cent in the wheat pit was wiped out today and replaced with losses ranging to ⅝ cent a bushel, partly in sympathy with the easier tone in stocks.

Wheat closed 1/8@1/2 lower, December 86¼, May 85¾@85⅝; corn ¼@½ down, December 50¼@50⅜, May 52¾@52⅞; oats unchanged to ¼ lower; soy beans ¼ down to ½ up; rye ⅜@⅝ down; lard 5 to 10 cents a hundredweight lower.

Reports of drought damage increased and grain men said the Southwest crop situation was the worst at this season that has ever been known. The area entered November with no indications of rain, clear weather being generally forecast for the grain belt.

Corn trade was quiet. Sales by shippers amounted to about 180,000 bushels, but bookings to arrive continued small.

Oats and rye markets also were slow. Receipts of soy beans were small, but some selling of futures was credited to cash interests.

Lard started steady but declined later in sympathy with grains and hogs.

Stock Prices Continue Irregularly Lower Despite News of Extra Dividends; Sales Pressure Is Moderate

New York, Nov. 1.—The stock market received some help today from extra and special dividends and also from reports of a pickup in Europe's purchases of raw materials which are not banned by the present embargo on the export of munitions to belligerents. The combination was not enough, however, to reverse the trend that has been in evidence for a week and prices continued their irregularly lower course. Mid-week trade statistics leaned to the favorable side, but they also were powerless to shake the list out of its present hesitant phase.

Pressure of liquidation has not been great at any time during this period, but on the other hand there has been no willingness on the part of traders to pay advancing prices for the speculative leaders. In only a handful of issues have there been any developments sufficiently important to cause stocks to move against the general trend.

Aviations Active

The list today was much the same as on recent sessions with the aviations giving a good account of themselves, but all groups holding within a narrow range. Oils were improved slightly by the boost in crude prices in Pennsylvania. Pressure was noted chiefly in the steels, equipments and lower grade rails. Trading volume on the big board fell below the 800,000-share mark.

Various commodities displayed firming tendencies and there was better support in a number of the futures markets, notably sugar, which has been under severe pressure. The above raise in Pennsylvania crude oil, amounting to 15 cents a barrel, was the fifth boost within a year. A sale of Philippine sugar was reported at 3 cents, whereas it was available the day before at 2.90 cents. Imported quick-silver was advanced $1 to $106 per flask and ferro manganese was moved up $10 a ton to $110 against a price of $80 in September. Hardening of commodity prices is seen as reflecting the greater demand caused by the war.

Sugar Futures Up

Sugar futures improved 6 to 8 points on covering operations and trade buying, which was encouraged by better demand in the outside market. Cocoa did better on fears that shipments might be interfered with by the submarine warfare. Wheat and cotton were more inclined to follow securities to lower levels, however. Cotton dropped 12 to 14 points in limited trading, and wheat eased ⅛ to ½ a cent a bushel after an early bulge.

Dividend news today was all to the liking of the bullish forces, the feature being the payments ordered by Standard Oil of New Jersey. The company increased its customary share dividend to three shares for each 200 held and also declared an extra cash payment of 25 cents in addition to the usual semi-annual 50-cent payment. Jersey closed up a point. Safeway Stores up 1¾, it also being the beneficiary of a stock dividend. Safeway is one of the companies with large investments in California, and, consequently its followers are awaiting the "ham-and-eggs" decision to be made by the voters there on election day.

Curtis-Wright at Top

Aviation issues continued to claim the major space on the tape, Curtiss-Wright holding its position as the most active stock. It opened and closed at its high for the year up ⅛. North American and Aviation Corporation also were active. Most of the steels were lower, but United States Steel edged up an eighth following its favorable earnings statement. A. M. Byers got into the spotlight with a jump of 1½.

Listed bond trading was slow today, with the tone uncertain. United States Treasury issues showed only small fractional variations in either direction, and best corporate issues likewise hovered around former figures. Speculative corporate issues drifted lower, with few exceptions, as this group usually follows after the stock section. Among foreign issues gains outnumbered the losses, but enthusiasm about Latin-American default bonds was none too well sustained. Turnover amounted to $6,580,000.

Orders for Steel Continue Heavy; Output at 93%

New York, Nov. 1.—Despite lack of quotations for first quarter delivery, steel orders continued to pile up for that period, Iron Age said today in its weekly survey.

"If the present flow of business continues," the magazine added, "some products will be sold out for the first quarter within another few weeks."

Iron Age estimated ingot production for the current week at 93 per cent, one point above last week. This week's output was figured at about 1,270,000 tons, higher than the peak weekly average of 1,193,284 tons in May 1929 when the industry operated at 102 per cent of the then existing capacity.

The Iron Age scrap composite rose 8 cents to $20.96 a ton after three consecutive weekly declines. The export market was said to be firmer, due to possibility of renewed buying by Great Britain and Japan.

Butter Output Drops 18% in September

Chicago, Nov. 1 (AP).—September butter production dropped 18 per cent from August, the largest August-September curtailment since 1929, the Department of Agriculture reported today. September churnings totaled about 134,515,000 pounds.

Rapid deterioration of pasture in some important Midwest dairy sections and an unfavorable relationship between butter-fat and feed prices curtailed both milk and butter production, Chicago Mercantile Exchange Traders said.

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 1.—Standard Oil Co., of New Jersey, directors today authorized a "melon" for stockholders by ordering an extra cash dividend of 25 cents on the more than 25,000,000 capital shares outstanding and a stock dividend of three shares for each 200 held.

The board also declared the usual semi-annual dividend of 50 cents in cash. All dividends are payable December 15 to holders of record November 15. In June a stock dividend of two shares for each 200 shares held was paid.

Bigelow-Sanford

Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co. declared a dividend of $1 on the common stock, payable December 1 to stock of record November 14. This is the first common stock dividend since December, 1937, when 50 cents was paid. The company has plants at Amsterdam, N. Y., and Thompsonville, Conn.

International Shoe Co.

International Shoe Co., of St. Louis, declared an extra dividend of 25 cents on capital stock, payable November 27 to stock of record November 10. For the fiscal year which ends November 30 stockholders have received in addition four quarterly payments of 37½ cents.

Safeway Stores Co.

Safeway Stores Co. directors ordered a cash dividend of 75 cents on common stock and a stock dividend of 2-100ths of a share of 5 per cent preferred stock on each common share held. Both are payable December 20 to stock of record December 5. A 75 cent dividend was paid on the common October 1 last. Safeway Stores 5 per cent preferred is currently quoted around $103 a share.

Deere & Co.

Directors of Deere & Co., farm implement manufacturers, declared a dividend of 75 cents a share on the common stock, payable December 1 to stock of record November 15. The last previous dividend on the common was $1.35 paid October 20, 1938. Directors also declared the regular quarterly dividend of 35 cents a share on the preferred stock, also payable December 1 to stock of record November 15.

Phelps Dodge Corporation

Directors of Phelps Dodge Corporation ordered a year-end dividend of 75 cents a share, payable December 8 to stock of record November 25. Three payments of 25 cents each were made earlier in the year, while a year-end dividend of 55 cents was disbursed a year ago.

Cotton Futures Slump 9 to 14 on U. S. Loan Action

New York, Nov. 1 (AP).—Traders slashed at cotton futures prices again today, leaving final quotations 9 to 14 points lower.

Most of the selling stemmed from holders of long contracts, who, brokers said, were disappointed over prospects on Government action affecting a loan on the new crop. At the same time, a good part of the day's sales was believed to be hedging placements by large mills against stocks of cotton built up when these interests bought the lint hand over fist during the recent heavy textile movement.

Cottonseed Oil

Selling influenced by lower lard and stock prices left cottonseed oil futures 7 to 9 points down today. Trade shorts bought on the dip.

Sales totaled 54 contracts: December, 6.68; January, 6.71 bid; March, 6.87; May, 6.98 bid.

Crude oil declined slightly with the Southeast and Valley bidding 5⅝ cents and Texas, 5½ nominal.

Living Costs Rise 2% in Month

New York, Nov. 1 (AP).—The National Industrial Conference Board said in a monthly survey today the cost of living of wage earners rose 2 per cent between August 15 and September 15, bringing living costs to the level of September, 1938.

Prior to this rise, the conference board reported, living costs were on the decline for nearly a year. The conference board is a research organization, supported by industries and corporations.

School Radio Series to Offer Outlet for Student Talent

Central Leads Off Saturday in 20 Broadcasts Over WJSV to Give D. C. Listeners A Chance to Hear Neighborhood Children

A parade of potential radio talent, fresh from local schoolrooms, will start Saturday night—to give youngsters a hearing and to give Washington listeners the fun of spotting promising new material from their own neighborhoods.

The new series of 20 programs by senior high schools of the District will be launched at 7:30 p. m. Saturday over WJSV, in the second season for the Students Radio Workshop under the sponsorship of the school system, the radio station and The Washington Post.

Two Turns at "Mike"

Each of the ten high schools will have two turns at the microphone in variety programs from 7:30 to 8 on Saturday evenings.

Central High School will lead off with the program this week, mixing drama, poetry, style flashes and an interview. In the latter a student will turn the tables by questioning a professor, when Jean Bryan, president of the schools' Radio Guild, will interview Dr. A. V. Smith, biology teacher.

Students and teachers are enthusiastic about possibilities of the series on an expanded scale since last year. Starting earlier this season with a larger number of programs, the series will offer school talent an unusual outlet.

Chance for Outlet

"Here's a chance for students to experiment in a new medium. It's an outlet for talent which doesn't ordinarily get a chance to be heard," Barry Blake, production manager of WJSV, pointed out.

It's a student-planned, student-produced program, for most of the schools already have radio groups locating talent, encouraging original ideas for writing and production, under teacher supervision. Blake comes into conference to shape up the program for the air and to conduct rehearsals, but declared yesterday the students themselves have much leeway for making it "the kind of program that they enjoy doing."

The Saturday night programs will vary greatly from time to time, depending on whether each school has discovered more talent in music or drama or other lines.

Author to Read Poem

Central High School's program this Saturday night will include a dramatic skit, "The Necklace," from de Maupassant's short story; the reading of a poem by its author, Charlotte Davis; the student-professor interview, and style flashes from the home economics department. Irving Lieberman, student, will be master of ceremonies.

Other dates in the series are: November 11, McKinley; November 18, Roosevelt; November 25, Armstrong; December 2, Woodrow Wilson; December 9, Anacostia; December 16, Western; December 23, Dunbar; February 10, Cardozo; February 17, Eastern; February 24, Central; March 2, McKinley; March 9, Roosevelt; March 16, Armstrong; March 23, Woodrow Wilson; April 6, Anacostia; April 13, Western; April 20, Cardozo; April 27, Dunbar; May 4, Eastern. In January the period will be filled by university programs.

Officials from the various high schools on the committee for the series are: Divisions 1-9, Anacostia, Mrs. O. H. Corkery; Central, L. G. Hoover; Eastern, Miss Zella Faris; McKinley, Miss H. C. Derrick; Roosevelt, C. E. Bish; Western, Miss Sue H. Gardner; Woodrow Wilson, Norman H. Nelson.

Divisions 10-13, Armstrong, G. David Houston; Cardozo, Mrs. J. M. Tate; Dunbar, Miss Julia E. Brooks.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Even bright bridge players would be baffled by the play of the cards of Dr. Frank C. Beall, of Fort Worth, as he manipulated today's four-heart hand to a successful conclusion.

His unusual technique, reported by Expert J. Edward Morrow, included, among other things, the immediate donation of two tricks to the adversaries. He was ready to accept any favors they might extend, and throwing them the lead opened the opportunity. He followed by stripping the hands and endplaying.

Says Morrow:

"West led the diamond five. Dummy won with the king and led a small spade which East held with the eight. East laid down his king of hearts, knowing it would be caught on a finesse, and it might well fool declarer into thinking it was a singleton; also a trump lead would shorten dummy's ability to ruff clubs. South won with the ace.

"Dr. Beall was in a mood to accept any assistance the opponents might be induced to dish out to him. He led his remaining spade. When West played low dummy ducked, and that trick was won by East's nine. East led his remaining heart, which rode to dummy's seven. North led the ace of spades, on which South discarded a small club. This third spade lead stripped East of spades. Then North led the fourth spade, which South ruffed.

"South led the diamonds. West ruffed and North played the six. West led a small club, which South took with the king. South led a small club and trumped it in dummy. Then North led the diamond ace, on which South discarded a club, South then trumped North's last diamond, and South's last card, a club, was trumped on the board."

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

Chapter 40

THEN THEY HAD raced to reach her. "Like to've killed that Whitcomb kid—he all but passed out," and heard from her that a man was under the car . . . "I thought then of course it must be her father, or husband, or something—that's all I knew!"—snatched her away from the jack and all heaving together lifted the car up enough to pull out from under it—"what do you think? A measly dirty little old French Canuck, with frizzly gray hair. She's never laid eyes on him before that day. It seemed he was somebody's hired man that lived neighbor to her folks over where she's been visiting. She started over with him from the other side because she wanted to come back from her vacation ahead of time, she'd heard he happened to be going to Ashley, and they hadn't the least idea over in their valley the storm was so bad." He stopped to draw in a great gulp of air and to crush half a slice of bread and butter into his mouth. But he gagged over it, and spit it out, his excitment still at the fury point. His face from having been very pale was now deeply flushed and his eyes bloodshot. Mr. Dewey asked if the man under the car had been killed. No, still breathing, Canby said, but unconscious, internally hurt probably. Well, what could be done there in the heaped-up snow, with two people badly injured? "And me with no whisky!" Canby hammered on his temples at the thought. Impossible to get the car back in the road, and if they could, it could not have rolled a foot through the drifted snow, so greatly had the storm worsened since the accident.

It was the girl who, wiping out of her eyes the blood that continually trickled from under her improvised bandages, had asked if the skis couldn't be lashed together to make a narrow sled, a cushioned seat from the car tied on it, and the man placed on that and pulled down the hill over the drifts to a house and a telephone. "She thought of it—we dumbbells'd have been there till now! I was trying to think of some way to get'm both out, of course. Aand when we got the skis ready, I tried to send her and keep the old Canuck there, but she wouldn't hear of that. She said he was worse hurt than she was." The old man was placed on the improvised litter, two of the boys towed it as best they could, plunging hip-deep in the snow. The one who still had his skis raced on ahead, to start a relief-sled back.

THE MAN and girl left behind had waited there in the snow for hours, years, ages—he did not know how long—until, first, the boy on skis came back with whisky and blankets, and then the slow wood sled, the horses wallowing in the drifts, with Dr. Craft poised impatiently on the side. 'I kept her warm all the time, anyhow. I had my hatchet; thank the Lord I hadn't left that at home. I got out the other cushion from the car and made her lie down on it. I grabbed out the lining of the top of the car and put that over her, and built a fire—lots of fires, all around a circle almost, with her lying down on the cushion in the middle. The wood was soaked and frozen hard, but with the gasoline from the tank it burned all right—when my fires'd get to going good, I'd go inside and sit down there with her and get my breath a little. It was as warm . . . ! It was like a little round room with walls made of fire. There was a basket of eggs in the car—the Canuck had been going to sell them, I suppose, and two three of'm weren't broken, and I cooked those in the ashes, and we ate'm—she hadn't had a thing since early breakfast, but she made me eat my share. God! was she game! And I cleaned out the grease pan and melted snow in it till I had it boiling, and cleaned it out again and melted more snow and had hot water for her to drink . . . " He shoved his plate violently away and said, grinding his teeth, "And all the time she was bleeding to death! And I too dumb to know it." Wildly looking from one to the other, he appealed to his listeners not to condemn him; to put themselves in his place. "I feel as if I'd killed her, see? If I'd known what to do—if I'd—but I never dreamed she was hurt so bad, not till she—not till she—she was so quiet and easy. Why, before she fainted, we talked quite a lot. She told me who se was, and I told her who I was and how I happened to be here—we talked about you, Uncle Tim, and the academy—I saw the blood trickling down over her face once in a while. I saw it—and I didn't do a thing. I saw she was getting awfully white, but, Christ! I'm the world's worst loss on first aid; I'd have been afraid of my life to touch that bandage; I didn't have any idea what the trouble was—and after she fainted I was worse scared than ever for fear of doing the wrong thing. I'd thought all along maybe I could just carry her out—on my back—never mind how far!—but I was afraid that would start the bleeding up. I just had to sit there, trying to warm her hands, watching her get whiter—God! I'll never see anything else, I tell you; I'll never see anything else, never, but her face with the life going out of it—I'd listen to see whether she was still breathing or not—and I'd climb up into the road to see if I could see anybody coming—and I'd go back to rub her hands and listen to her breathing—anybody but me would have thought of something to do!—but I didn't dare touch that bandage—it looked pretty good to me; I mean it wasn't really soaked with blood. You see, she'd torn up a nightgown or something she got out of her little suitcase—think of the nerve of her, cut up the way she was, crawling out from under the wreck and getting her head tied up somehow, and then trying to g-g-get that d'damn car jacked up!" He flung his arms out on the table and dropepd his head on them.

His silence broke the spell which had held the others, leaning to his harshly whispered words, their faces blank white under the glare of the unshaded bulbs. They straightened themselves stiffly, took their eyes from the narrator for the first time, and looked at each other unseeingly.

The door behind them opened, closed, noiselessly. Dr. Craft was there to issue commands: absolute quiet in the house tonight, his wife would stay with the case till the roads were sanded and he could get another nurse down from the Ashley Hospital. "Yes, yes, she has a chance. But it's touch and go. She's lost an awful lot of blood. Shock too. That's probably the worst. Maybe some internal injury. I can't tell about that till I examine her carefully, and I can't do that till her pulse is stronger. Maybe a transfusion tomorrow—Say, you, whatever your name is," he said roughly to Canby, sprawled forward in his chair to listen, "you go home and get to bed. You're just about all in yourself. You ought to know better than to heave on that heavy woodsled the way you did, when they turned it around. Didn't you ever hear of such a thing as rupture? Now remember, all of you, not one sound tonight! Miss Peck, if you try to clear off that table till I tell you you can, I'll strangle you. The rest of you, that don't live her, don't go back in there. Go out the back door." He went out of that door himself, closing it with infinite care behind him.

They stirred, drew breath, stood uncertain. Miss Lane asked, "What's all that bood on your face, Mr. Hunter? Did you get cut, too?"

He started wildly up and ran to the mirror over the kitchen sink, stooping to look into it, wetting his fingers at the faucet and rubbing at the red smear. It came away cleanly, leaving no mark behind. "That's her blood!" he told himself, in a tense whisper, looking down at the pink stain on his fingers. He drew up his great hand to a knuckled fist and swung it to and fro. "Blood running down all over her poor little face and not a goddam scratch on my hide!" he said with fury, and lunged with all his might at the wall beside him, washing his first against the rough plaster as though it were the jaw of an enemy.

The blood came then—spurting out in a scarlet stream from the knckles, dripping from his thick outstretched fingers to the floor.

Aunt Lavinia was appalled. "Canby! You're crazy!" she cried.

Miss Peck reached for a cloth to stop the bleeding. Mrs. Dewey put her to one side. "Leave him alone," he said. "'Twun't do him a mite of harm."

BACK OF THEM Timothy Hulme leaned faintly against the wall, and then let himself down into a chair because the droning in his ears made him too dizzy to stand up. It was the chair in which Canby had been sitting. Like Canby, he laid his arms on the table before him. But he did not bury his face in them. He sat looking down at the long slim distinction of his hands, so like his father's and his grandfather's, and at the perfectly intact, slightly middle-aged skin which covered them.

HE HAD KNOWN at that moment all that was to be, and he might as well—he thought, leaning forward to drop a dry stick on the sober little June watch-fire—he might as well have yielded at once to the first intimation as to resist for these last three months of misery.

The white-hot core of the fire, tiny but ardently alive, throbbed as it seized with passion on the new food for flames. A column of murky smoke rose into the still night air, and then, as the blaze burned clear, thinned to an airy plume. Timothy sat back on his granite ledge, his eyes fixed on the bowing of the little plume of smoke toward the west, where, long hours ago, the sun had gone down. Often enough he had noticed that smoke-drift in other Junes, up here at night on the Cobble. In those other years, rational years, he and Mr. Dewey and the boys sitting around the fire had sometimes speculated about the reason for this, wondering whether on still nights the warmed lightness of the air around the setting sun created everywhere on the globe this soft, almost imperceptible, steady breathing toward the west of the night wind. But now he was not thinking of what was before his eyes. He was thinking that he had known, there in the kitchen, throbbing like the core of a fire in the fierceness of Canby's excitement, he had known at that moment what was before him—his every fiber darkly stained with his foreknowing.

At the other end of the Cobble, a shower of sparks, rising in the darkness, showed that old Mr. Dewey too, had put fresh wood on his watch-fire. Between the two stretched rows of dark forms, rolled in blankets. They lay motionless in the trancelike sleep of youth, still as the great rock that was their bed; but just below, where the granite crest of the Cobble softened into upland pasture, the sheep, uneasy at the invasion of their solitude, moved restlessly. Somtelmes a bell tinkled. Sometimes a ewe called with a low bleating and was answered by a thudding of little hoofs on sod and stones.

Timothy held his watch to the glow of the fire. Past midnight. In an hour the moon would be up. By the traditional routine of this yearly expedition on the mountain with the senior boys, he was to waken the sleepers to see the moon rise over the wall. He knew what would happen when he did:—yawns, grunts, momentary openings of an eye, the blankets re-rolled more tightly around motionless forms. The teacher's life, he had often thought—continually waking sleepers to see beauties or meanings they cared nothing about, and watching them sink back to apathy.

Enough light fell from the sky, thick sown with stars, to show him that Mr. Dewey now stood up from his fire and, followed by his old dog, picked his way among the sleepers, along the Cobble. When he reached Timothy, "Do you feel like sleeping, T. C.?" he asked in a low voice. "If you do, turn in for an hour or so. I'll keep watch."

"Thank you, Mr. Dewey, I don't believe I will," said Timothy in the carefully natural voice he had been using for three months. "How about you?"

Mr. Dewey smiled, looked around him from the dusky stretch of the Crandall Pitch pasture to the mountains brooding under the glittering black sky, looked back at Timothy and shook his head. "No, I'm not sleepy," he said in a peaceful voice, and went back to his own small fire.

Timothy was not sleepy either, although he was very tired. But this is better, he thought, his weary wide-open eyes burning with sleeplessness, this is better than lying in that damned bed in that damned bedroom, staring up hour after hour at——A dreary inner voice said derisively, "If you think that using a great deal of profanity is going to make you more modern, more like Canby, you're mistaken."

He gave a rough animal-like shudder, as if to shake off a gaddy, and dropped his head between his hands. The night breeze, so mild as almost to be stillness, blew gently on one cheek, tilting the impartial column of the smoke ever so little toward where the sun had last shed its warmth.

With a bitter, doubled consciousness, knowing from the beginning of each remembered scene exactly how it would end, and yet living it through with the torturing intensity of suspense, he began once more to look at the faces and actions and to hear the voices which—night after night—filled the darkness of his bedroom as soon as he put out his light. Grotesque, tragic, absurd, violent, trivial—and all as inevitable as fate! —he saw and heard again the sights and sounds that had brought him to where he was.

Old Mrs. Washburn's voice rising from the murmur of talk at the supper-table—how could any man have recognized so farcical an episode as the beginning of disaster? Or if he had, how could he have warded it off? —"So our little patient is well enough to let the nurse go? Well, we musn't leave the poor child all alone in that darkened room. I'll bring my rocker down and sit right beside her bed with my knitting."

Miss Peck had been the first to collect herself enough to speak. "The doctor doesn't allow anyone with her, Mrs. Washburn. He even had the nurse sit out in the living-room, with the door ajar. It's not only her eyes, you know. Nor the loss of blood. It's the results of shock. The doctor . . . "

"Oh, did he? Well, all right, I'll do what the nurse did then. If the door's ajar, I can sit close to it and talk through the crack. We must keep her cheered up."

Maddened by their ineffectualness, Timothy heard again the futile defenses they feebly tried to throw up. "The doctor says she's not strong enough yet to . . . Dr. Anson said she was to be sure . . . "

Mrs. Washburn quoted him firmly, "I heard him say that she's really convalescent now, and it would do her good to hear some cheerful talk once in a while, to keep her mind off this tiresome time of waiting for her eyes to be well enough to take off the bandage."

To Be Continued.

Two Youths Get Long Jail Terms In Kidnap-Theft

Suffolk, Va., Nov. 1 (AP).—Circuit Judge James L. McLemore sentenced John Gross, 19, of Denbigh, to 15 years' imprisonment and Robert Hendrix, 19, of Richmond, to 8 years today after the youths entered pleas of guilty to a charge of robbing and kidnaping Horace Butler, a Suffolk filling station operator, July 26.

Carmen Carraway Baxley, 18-year-old girl from Fort Myers, Fla., who also is charged with participation in the filling station holdup and kidnaping will be brought to trial later, Judge McLemore said.

Court officials said Alexandria and Richmond authorities would be given an opportunity to seek custody of the two prisoners before they were sent to the penitentiary to begin serving their sentences. The youths are wanted for questioning in connection with holdups in both cities.

FOR Children's SNIFFLES

This gentle ointment soothes and protects irritated mucous membrane, reduces swelling, and thus opens breathing passages wider. It soon checks sneezing and sniffing.

Also rub Mentholatum on the child's chest, back, and neck. This will improve local blood circulation and help relieve cold discomforts more effectively.

Mentholatum helps in so many ways that you should always remember this: For Discomforts of Colds—Mentholatum. Link them together in your mind.

Twenty District Police Assigned To Bolster White House Guard

Rookies, to Be Paid by Secret Service, Will Replace Them on Metropolitan Force, Pending Congress Increase of Mansion Staff

Twenty Metropolitan policemen have been assigned to the White House as the first step in a plan to increase the regular police force at the mansion from 60 to 90 men, it was learned last night.

They have been detailed to the White House temporarily pending the enactment by Congress of legislation increasing the force. But the plan is to have as large a force there permanently when legislation has been passed.

Their places will be filled by 20 "rookies" who entered the Metropolitan Police School yesterday for three months' training.

Under an unusual arrangement, the first of its kind ever adopted in the District, the rookies will draw pay temporarily from the Secret Service.

Official sources said this scheme was adopted so that the White House force could be augmented immediately without leaving vacancies on the metropolitan force and without spending money which has not been appropriated.

Police Chief Ernest W. Brown, responsible sources said, objected to the transfer of men from the active rolls to the White House on the ground that it would lighten his force. The arrangement mentioned then was devised to fill the vacancies.

The rookies were selected from the Civil Service list. Expectation is that at the end of the three months training period, Congress will have passed a bill increasing the White House force, and they can then be transferred to the District force and placed on the Metropolitan pay roll.

Their salary while on the Secret Service pay roll will be $100 a year more than the salary for Washington police rookies. They were sworn in yesterday with 18 regular Metropolitan appointees.

Increase in the White House police force has been recommended by Capt. Herbert L. Marcey, it was learned. But the arrangement has been worked out by the Secret Service, which is responsible for protecting the President and his family. The present White House force, it is said, is inadequate, in view of absences due to annual leave, days off and illness, for the enlarged policing duties resulting from present disturbed conditions.

Guard Training Insures Security, Says Gen. Waller

Richmond, Va., Nov. 1 (AP).—Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, the Virginia adjutant general, said in an address prepared for radio delivery tonight that constant practice and training by American military forces would "insure our security as a Nation and greatly increase the safety of the participants."

The address was in the form of an interview conducted by Leigh Stevens, State director of the office of Government reports, and in reply to a question concerning the present war Gen. Waller said:

"What is being done is a measure that will aid in keeping us out of war. Experts concede that if our Army had been adequate in 1917, Germany, nor any other nation, would not have defied our Government's protests in their infringements on our rights. Our very military policy could only have the effect of stopping wars after diplomatics measures fail."

Fire Perils Barn, Horses at Fort

Fire early yesterday threatened a large barn and 100 horses of Troop E, Third Cavalry, at Fort Myer.

The blaze was confined to the hay loft by firemen from the post and five Arlington County fire companies. Damage was said to be slight. A sentry roused stable crews of Troop E, who led their mounts to safety.

FairfaxReports Marked Rise In Building

79 Permits in October Double Outlay of Those in September

Building operations for October, Commissioner of Revenue James U. Kincheloe said yesterday, showed a marked increase over September.

In the month 79 permits were issued, representing an outlay of $253,650, which more than doubled the outlay of those issued in September. Of the permits issued, 71 were for new construction and 8 were for improvements to old buildings.

County Clerk John M. Whalen reported 481 deeds and trusts were admitted to record during October.

Realty Index Voted

Fairfax.—The county board of supervisors, meeting yesterday at the courthouse, voted to set up an index of all real estate in the county.

A special committee from the board, consisting of Miss Edith Rogers, T. Wallace Carper and D. W. Buckley, was named to draft such data as shall be included on the cards. The committee will be guided by a card used in Henrico County for the same purpose.

The board requested County Clerk John Whalen to advise Judge Walter T. McCarthy that it has set a salary of $10 a day for assessors who will make the assessment of real estate in 1940.

Farr Opposed to Tax Raise

Fairfax.—Col. F. F. Farr, Republican nominee for the House of Delegates, yesterday issued the following statement on questions which he said affect the interest of the voters of Fairfax County.

"I am opposed to any increase in taxation. I believe by proper economy in the administration of both State and county government taxes can be reduced without in anywise injuring the best interests of our people.

"I am opposed to the repeal of the poll tax, $1 of which is used for education and 50 cents is returned to the county for county use.

"I am opposed to change in the present form of our county government, as I do not believe at this time with our present population any change would be the slightest benefit to our people, but on the contrary would result in an increase in the present cost of county government. I understand my opponent is advocating a change in the form of county government and has prepared a bill he is contemplating introducing if elected.

"I am a native of Fairfax County, received my primary education in the county schools, taught in the county schools, am a member of the Virginia bar and have practiced law since 1906.

"If elected, I pledge myself to actively and to the best of my ability discharge the duties of the office, guided at all times by my desire to serve and prompt the best interests of our people."

He is opposed by Francis P. Miller, incumbent, Democratic nominee for reelection.
